Remarks by Representative Sheppard

Of California

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, as senior Representative from California, it is my unpleasant duty to announce to the House the passing of our dear friend and colleague CLYDE DOYLE of the 23d District of California.

The quality of the dedicated life and the invaluable work of CLYDE DOYLE is well known to every Member of this body in which he was serving with great distinction his country, his State, and his constituency.

Author of Doyle resolution, House Resolution 151, in 84th Congress, adopted unanimously, requiring at least two members of every investigative committee present at hearings—passed the House by unanimous vote. Author of Doyle bill, H.R. 8772, dealing with less than honorable discharges; appointed chairman of Special Subcommittee on Armed Services Committee and held public hearings on said bill. Said bill passed the House of Representatives August 5, 1957, by an overwhelming standing vote of 226 ayes to 8 nays. Author of Doyle bill, H.R. 1935, which passed the House unanimously, dealing with less than honorable discharges. Author of Doyle bill, H.R. 9944, filed at the opening of the 87th Congress and which bill was referred to the House Committee on Un-American Activities of which DOYLE is a member. Its purpose is to outlaw the Communist Party in the United States or any Communist-action organization in the United States whether the designation of Communist is part of the name of the organization or not. It declares it to be a criminal offense to belong to such organization and provides penalties for becoming or remaining a member of Communist-action organization and penalties for violation of the bill of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both, for each violation, and any organization which violates any provision of the bill shall be fined not more than $10,000 for each violation. Has presided as subcommittee chairman of House Un-American Activities Committee in many American cities at public hearings involving subversion and subversive activities. Has traveled extensively in many foreign countries as official member of the House Armed Services Committee. Was serving his 16th year as a Member of the House of Representatives; and had earned what is recognized as very valuable seniority status on his major committees and on the floor of the House of Representatives.

CLYDE DOYLE RESIDENCE: ONE IN 23D DISTRICT AND ONE IN ARLINGTON, VA.

Congressman and Mrs. Doyle resided at 8949–A State Street, South Gate, where they leased a furnished apartment by the year. Congressman and Mrs. Doyle early purchased a suitable home for themselves at Arlington, Va., only 20 minutes by automobile, driving mostly along the beautiful Potomac River, from his home to his office on Capitol Hill in the New House Office Building, it being necessary for the Congressman to also have a home close by his Washington, D.C., office, as he was necessarily at the Nation's Capitol or working from the Nation's Capitol most of the time.

DOYLE ATTENDANCE ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Los Angeles Times, Tuesday, December 26, 1961, publicized that Congressman CLYDE DOYLE was 1 of only 3 California Congressmen and 1 of only 31 House Members with 100 percent voting records during the 1st session of the 87th Congress.

Speaker Sam Rayburn, twice as long the Speaker of the House of Representatives as any other man in the history of the U.S. Congress before his untimely decease, wrote over his own signature about Congressman CLYDE DOYLE as follows:

"CLYDE DOYLE is one of the most effective men in his committees and also on the floor of the House of Representatives. He is able, he is honest, and he has the facility for expressing himself in such a way as to impress all the Members of the House with his knowledge of the subject in hand. I think CLYDE is one of the very best men we have in the House of Representatives.

"We have shown our confidence in him in many ways."

Remarks by Representative Miller

Of California

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE and I came to Congress together in the 79th Congress and formed a friendship that was a lasting one. I think it is an enviable thing that when a man passes on as has CLYDE he leaves behind a reputation that no man can say he was ever injured by him or that he ever willingly injured any person. He was a Christian gentleman, a kindly, intelligent man, aggressive, and a loyal public servant. This Congress and the country will be the loser in his untimely passing.

Mrs. Miller and I extend to Mrs. Doyle and the family our sincerest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Albert

Of Oklahoma

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was one of the finest friends I have ever had, one of the finest men I have ever known. I have known him well for 17 years. I have known him as a colleague in the House and on committees. I have known him as a great legislator. I have known him as the gentleman he was.

CLYDE DOYLE and I served together on the Select Committee To Investigate Lobbying Activities in the 81st Congress, known as the Buchanan committee. This was only a few years ago and CLYDE's death reaffirms in my mind the frailty of life on this earth. I am now the sole surviving Democratic member of that committee.

CLYDE DOYLE had rare qualities. He was one of the fairest and most judicious men I have ever known. He insisted that the business of the House be handled according to the rules. He insisted on the rights of witnesses before committees.

He was soft spoken and gentle but inside this kind, considerate, and judicious man there was a deep resolve which, when principles were at stake, could be as hard and as resolute as steel.

There is an emptiness in this Chamber without CLYDE DOYLE. For 19 years he almost invariably sat in the same seat. He was practically always there by the table taking notes. He was perhaps the most attentive Member of the House. He kept personal notes day in and day out on the proceedings and activities of the House, putting down his own observations, his own comments, and establishing a chronology that could never be put into the official records of the House. CLYDE had thousands of pages of notes. He often talked to me about this project. He had planned on his retirement to edit his papers and to put them into a usable form. This would have been an extraordinary document on the Congress. It would have been of extraordinary benefit to students. Those of us who participate in the day-to-day activities of this House know how difficult it is to get across the story of Congress. We know how cold and unconvinced even the best and most scholarly books on the subject generally leaves us. In his notes CLYDE has left a lasting memorial to the human side of the House, and on-the-scene, day-to-day portraits of the type and character and skill of his colleagues, one by one. I hope that it will be possible for his priceless contribution to congressional history to be made available to Members, to schoolchildren, and to scholars interested in this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will excuse a personal reference. Shortly before the adjournment of the House last night, CLYDE DOYLE came to me and said he would like to have five extensions in the Appendix of the Record and asked if I would get the floor manager at the time of adjournment to obtain the order. I reached in my pocket and found that I had lost my pencil. He handed me this blue pencil and said, "I think the majority leader should be equipped with a pencil with the compliments of the gentleman from the 23d District of California." I thanked him and he said, "Here also is a red pencil which I use to indicate mistakes." This was my last conversation with CLYDE DOYLE. He may have made mistakes, but I would venture that his mistakes were as few as those of any among us. His attention to duty and detail, his respect for this House and for his colleagues, his character, his mind, his heart, combined to make his contribution a monument of public service. I was shocked beyond words to learn this morning of his passing. I have been told that he died in the calm serenity of sleep. What better evidence of a pure heart, of a noble character, or of a life fully and rightly lived do we need? He died composed and unafraid.

I extend my deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and his family.

Remarks by Representative Vinson

Of Georgia

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, my heart is very heavy today.

I have a lost a good friend, the Congress has lost a very distinguished Member, and the Nation has lost a man who dedicated his life to the betterment of mankind.

Just yesterday, on the floor of this House, as we were debating issues that are vital to the security of our Nation, Mr. DOYLE discussed with many of us some of the items that were in controversy. He wanted the Nation to have everything that was necessary for our defense.

On Monday, he spoke in behalf of the extension of the draft law. At that time he expressed concern about the number of young men who are physically disqualified from serving in the Armed Forces.

It seems somehow fitting that among Mr. DOYLE's last official words on the floor of this House are words that demonstrated his sincere interest in the welfare of the young men of this Nation.

And now he has crossed to the other side of the river. The uncertainty of life was never more evident than in the sad news I received this morning concerning the loss of this fine man.

Mr. DOYLE was a gentleman in every sense of the word, but more than that he was a Christian gentleman who was dedicated heart and soul to America.

He knew the cost of freedom for he lost his only son in World War II. And his entire life was devoted to improving the lives of his fellow man and the American way of life.

He was a sincere man with a heart that overflowed with goodness, and a man who found time to be concerned for the oppressed and the downtrodden.

He was a man with a conscience and an unparalleled sense of integrity.

Mr. DOYLE has been a member of the Armed Services Committee since the 81st Congress. During this period of time he successfully fulfilled all of the important duties that were assigned to him.

Every member of our Armed Forces has lost a champion.

On each of his letters, Mr. DOYLE always put these words:

Our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are.

Mr. DOYLE was an example of the best that the Nation has to offer.

I extend my sincerest sympathy to his family.

I hope they will be comforted in the knowledge that his contributions to the Nation and to mankind will stand as a perpetual memorial to his accomplishments throughout the years that were allotted to him.

Remarks by Representative McCormack

Of Massachusetts

Mr. McCORMACK. My dear friend, CLYDE DOYLE, was here yesterday; he is not with us today. It is most significant that yesterday a bill was acted upon and passed by this body that came out of the great Committee on the Armed Services, of which he was a member for so many years. It can truly be said that CLYDE died in the line of duty.

CLYDE DOYLE's memory will always live in the minds of those of us who knew him, whether in or out of Congress. No more dedicated Member ever served in the Congress of the United States than he. A great American, an outstanding legislator, a fine gentleman, CLYDE DOYLE was not only great but he was good. Possessed of an understanding mind, he symbolized everything that was noble, true, and fine in the life of humankind. How many times has he spoken to you and me who are here? And how often will we remember that fine sweet philosophical outlook of life that he had.

To me the most beautiful thing in the journey of life is to meet men and women with beautiful, good, and understanding minds. CLYDE DOYLE possessed such a mind, an example that each and every one of us could follow.

He was a man who realized the dangers that confront our country in the world today, in this trying period of history. CLYDE DOYLE always stood for strength on the part of our Government. He recognized the evil mind and the intent of the Communists. He fought them with vigor. He recognized that the only force the Communists respect is what they fear: military strength and power on our part greater than the Soviet Union possesses. He recognized that the only level upon which negotiations could be had with the Soviet Union was on the level of the law of self-preservation; and every action, every thought, every voice on his part, every vote on his part concerning the national interest of our country and the improving of our position in the world was on the side of strength. How often has CLYDE DOYLE said to me:

If I am going to err in judgment, I prefer to err on the side of strength, not weakness.

So while he is not with us today, the memory of CLYDE DOYLE will always linger in the minds of those who served with him.

To Mrs. Doyle and his daughter I extend my profound sympathy in their great loss and sorrow.

Remarks by Representative Arends

Of Illinois

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, this morning as I went to my office the Capitol flag was at half-mast. A couple of words came to my mind: "Oh, no." I recognized that the half-masted flag indicated that another of our colleagues had passed to his reward.

I immediately called and learned it was my good, warm friend, CLYDE DOYLE.

This has left me, as it has many of his colleagues in the House, with a heavy heart. I have had the privilege to serve with CLYDE DOYLE for many years. I got to know him well, not only as a man and as a legislator.

CLYDE DOYLE served as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, on which I have been privileged to serve. He was a truly diligent member, and always actively participated in the committee work. He was respected by his committee colleagues for his objective approach to all defense questions.

CLYDE DOYLE was a man outstanding in many respects—honorable, fair, just, and dependable—and, as has been said by the majority leader, he was a good man. This means so much when we really try to analyze what the word "good" means.

He was a great American, dedicated not only to his country but likewise to this House of Representatives, which he loved. And the House of Representatives has had great affection for him. I looked upon him as a friend, and I am proud to have been CLYDE DOYLE's friend.

He leaves us at a time when men of his stature are needed in the Congress of the United States. He will be sorely missed, not only by those on the majority side but likewise by his many friends on this side of the aisle.

Only yesterday I had opportunity to visit with CLYDE. I find it difficult to bring myself to the realization that he has now left us. I will miss him as you will.

I extend to his family my deepest sympathy, and in so doing I know I speak for each and every Member on this side of the aisle.

Remarks by Representative Shelley

Of California

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I first met CLYDE DOYLE in 1936, and from that personal meeting there grew a friendship which was warm and true. CLYDE DOYLE was all that everyone has said about him. He had fine qualities. He was a man with an understanding attitude, he was a man of forgiveness.

CLYDE served as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities in this House, and I can recall several times when CLYDE was attacked rather bitterly by those who opposed the committee and anyone connected with that committee.

At one particular time in southern California some years ago, I spoke to CLYDE about this. He smiled and said, "Jack, they just do not understand. They are misguided."

I have never heard CLYDE DOYLE say an unkind word about those who attacked or disagreed with him. He was understanding, he was kind, he had real convictions. He was dedicated to his principles, to his family, and to his country.

It was my pleasure to consider CLYDE DOYLE as a friend.

All I can say now is, let his example of life be a guide to all of us, and may his passing be a passage into the eternal life and perpetual peace.

Remarks by Representative Willis

Of Louisiana

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, we were shocked and dismayed with the loss of a distinguished public servant, a Member of this House, and for 12 years a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities—CLYDE DOYLE.

He was accustomed to close his letters with a most significant statement:

Our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are.

This was his philosophy and creed of living. I know no one of whom it could be more truthfully said that he gave his best to the service of his country.

In the many hearings of the Committee on Un-American Activities in which I have participated with him, I have observed that he performed an incredible amount of work in preparation for the particular task ahead, that he was conscientious in the performance of his duties, and that he was kind and considerate. He never lost an opportunity to speak well of his native State, of which he was justly proud. As an able and effective legislator, and a colleague whose warmth of personality inspired all of those associated with him, he deserved and now receives, the plaudits of us all. He was truly and a great and good man.

His life throughout has been an inspiration, and I am sure that to his wife and family his memory will ever remain as a benediction, and to them I extend my deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Johansen

Of Michigan

Mr. JOHANSEN. Mr. Speaker, in the issue of the Congressional Record which arrived in our offices this morning, there appeared an extension of remarks entered in the Appendix of the Record on yesterday.

In the mysterious ways of Providence, what was yesterday a routine incident today becomes a symbol and a remembrance of a distinguished and respected colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

In this particular insertion in the Record, our colleague from California included two resolutions supporting the work of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, of which CLYDE had been a member for 12 years.

It was typical of Congressman DOYLE's devotion to his Representative responsibilities and to the genuinely bipartisan character of his service on this committee that one of these resolutions had been adopted by the Downey Republican Women, Federated, and the other by Local Union 2058, United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO—both voicing full support of the work of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

As with his membership on the House Committee on Armed Services and all of his duties in this House, Congressman DOYLE served capably, conscientiously, and devotedly.

Through my own association with CLYDE on the House Un-American Activities Committee for more than 4 years, I know that he regarded this particular assignment as a stern, necessary, and ofttimes distasteful duty. I suspect that by temperament it was extremely difficult for this friendly and kindly gentleman to accept the fact that there are men and women, nominally fellow citizens, dedicated to enmity to the United States and the American way of life, but Congressman DOYLE accepted his responsibility without flinching, and I recall more than one occasion in which he severely and yet gently chided hostile and recalcitrant witnesses for accepting the benefits of citizenship and even invoking the protections of the Constitution while joining in the conspiracy seeking the violent overthrow of our Government.

I have been privileged to work particularly closely with Congressman DOYLE as ranking minority member of the committee during the past few weeks when he was serving as its acting chairman. In this relationship he was always the soul of considerateness and courtesy. I am profoundly shocked and deeply grieved that he has so suddenly left us. I extend my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of his family and to his colleagues in the California delegation.

Remarks by Representative Rivers

Of South Carolina

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, the Nation and this House have suffered another irreparable loss in the passing last night in his sleep of CLYDE DOYLE, our distinguished colleague from California. It was my privilege to serve with him since his assignment to the Committee on Armed Services and to break bread with him often.

In the intimacy of these associations I came to value deeply his friendship and endeavored to extend unhesitatingly my friendship to him.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE was a brave man. He had successfully fought off the effects of a serious illness recently and he did this without a word of complaint and with a determination which will always be an inspiration to those of us who had the privilege to know him.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a man who lived his daily life with a deep faith, ready to face his Maker.

My deepest and sincerest sympathy goes out to his family, to the countless friends who kept him in the Congress over these many years, and to the members of his distinguished congressional delegation.

CLYDE was a man who, as the gentleman has just said, placed the love of his country above his personal health. He was too busy in the pursuit of safeguarding the Nation's interests, that it is no wonder his health at last failed. Like a true soldier, he dedicated his life to his country. Those of us who have served with him will long cherish his memory.

CLYDE DOYLE was too busy with life's problems to realize—as Tennyson says—that:

> Such a tide as moving seems asleep,
> Too full for sound and foam,
> When that which drew out the boundless deep
> Turns again home.

My colleagues, CLYDE DOYLE has gone home.

Remarks by Representative Sisk

Of California

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow and shock that I learned of the sudden death of our colleague and my warm, personal friend, CLYDE DOYLE. He was a valued colleague and an effective and highly esteemed member of the California delegation. I shall miss him not only as a Member of this body, but as a good friend and a devout Christian who inspired others to become better disciples of Christianity.

CLYDE DOYLE was one of the kindest persons I have ever known; I never heard him make an unkind remark about anyone. As a legislator, he was extremely capable and was a hard and productive worker. He was a most conscientious Representative for the 23d District of California and kept in constant touch with his constituents by sending them personal messages. During his years in Congress, he must have sent thousands of these handwritten messages on cards, and I know they will be greatly missed by the people of his district.

The Congress and the Nation have lost a truly patriotic and dedicated servant in the death of CLYDE DOYLE. Along with his many other friends, I extend my deepest sympathy to his wife and family. I hope they will take some small consolation from knowing in what high regard we all held him, and that their grief is shared by each and everyone of us.

Remarks by Representative Horan

Of Washington

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of serving with CLYDE DOYLE since the 79th Congress, and I knew him well.

His life here among us was a benchmark of conduct, something for us all to remember when we may be soul searching regarding the ethics that should accompany personalities and actions of Members of this body.

Mr. Speaker, he was kind, his integrity was beyond reproach, he was industrious. He worked for the best interests of all of us.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE had real vision.

Mrs. Horan and I join my colleagues here and CLYDE'S friends everywhere in extending our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their daughter.

Remarks by Representative Boggs

Of Louisiana

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a man of many parts. He was also a man of great human insight. I will explain by telling something that he did a few years ago. A young boy from my area had come here as a page. One day this lad was walking through the tunnel and our colleague met him. Unbeknown to me, he sat down and wrote the mother of this boy one of the most thoughtful letters that I had ever had the privilege of reading.

This was reassuring to this lady. All of us have had some experience, I am sure, with youngsters who come here as page boys, some of them very young. The mothers are concerned and worried about them. CLYDE had the human instinct of understanding just that sort of thing.

The lady who received that letter was so pleased that when she came to Washington to see her son, the first person she wanted to see was, of course, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE.

He was very active in so many fields of service; I am certain many of them have been mentioned. He worked with the Boy Scouts and other youth organizations. He had time enough to raise money to help crippled children and retarded children and join in the campaigns against diseases such as tuberculosis. He worked on recreational programs. He was active in his professional associations, such as the bar association and related legal activities. In addition to that he served as a member of a draft board. He found time for all kinds of things which meant that he gave of himself to other people.

The distinguished majority leader mentioned the meticulous diary which he kept here day by day. I used to sit by him sometimes and take a look at what he was putting down. All of us know the value of that sort of thing. My wife has called my attention to a series of articles which has been running in the Washington Post, I think, written by the wife of a distinguished former Member of this body who served here over 50 years ago. I have been reading that series because this lady recounts events about Members and their families which are so similar to events which occur today. I hope that this meticulously kept diary which CLYDE DOYLE kept will become a part of the history of this body and the history of our great country.

I know all of us join in extending sympathy to his loved ones. Someone has said that in the knowledge that "to live in hearts we leave behind is not to die at all." I think that best describes our distinguished former colleague.

Remarks by Representative Gary

Of Virginia

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a fine Christian gentleman. I know no one who better exemplified the teachings of the Master; and when you say that, you have said all that can be said about any man; you have given to him the highest accolade of praise.

It was my privilege, only a month or two ago, to serve on a committee that nominated CLYDE as vice president of our Thursday morning breakfast prayer group. He served in that group for many years with great distinction. He was a valuable member. This morning it was to attend the meeting of that group that his wife went to arouse him when she found that he had passed on.

May I say that his passing was in keeping with the even tenor of his life. I am certain that he was welcomed with the loud hosannas of the angelic choir as he passed through the portals this morning to that undiscovered land from whose bourn no traveler returns.

I pay my highest respect to him at this time and extend my deepest sympathy to his family.

Remarks by Representative Hardy

Of Virginia

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, those of us who have enjoyed any intimate association with CLYDE DOYLE have had our lives enriched by that association. For a number of years I have been privileged to sit next to CLYDE on the Committee on Armed Services. I think I have never known a man so considerate, so understanding, and so kind. One of the highlights of my service in this Congress is that I have been privileged to look upon CLYDE as a friend. He was a man of big heart, the kindest person I have ever known. Truly he was one of God's noblemen.

Remarks by Representative Cohelan

Of California

Mr. COHELAN. Mr. Speaker, the news of CLYDE DOYLE'S death leaves me personally stunned. CLYDE is the second member of the California delegation with whom I have had a close and affectionate association to be taken from us during my time in this great body.

Upon arrival in the Congress in 1959 I was assigned to room 1028 in the New House Office Building, just two doors away from the office of CLYDE DOYLE. Because of our many common problems affecting the welfare of our State, we soon became very close personal friends. Our association was enriched in many other ways, through other activities in which we jointly participated, but particularly on the great House Committee on Armed Services on which we both served.

In the course of our friendship he treated me with the dignity and the respect of a peer and a colleague, but also with the sternness and the gentle affection of a father for his son.

CLYDE was truly a gentleman. He was a gentle and a tender man. He was a man who, having lost a hero son, knew the agony of great personal loss and the heartsickness that accompanies it. In his quiet and effective way he too gave his own life for his country through his devoted service.

CLYDE will be long remembered by all of us who loved him and had the privilege of serving with him. Mrs. Cohelan and I extend our deepest sympathies to his wife, daughter, and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate at this point to read two poems which were particular favorites of CLYDE'S. The first, "A Congressman's Daily Prayer," was written by CLYDE and his wife Lydia for their 1959 Christmas greeting. The second was written by Lydia Doyle for the 1962 Christmas season:

CLYDE GILMAN DOYLE

A Congressman's Daily Prayer
(By Congressman Clyde and Lydia Doyle)

As each new day, need of rededication, by me, brings
Give me, dear Lord,
An understanding heart for all mankind,
Clear thinking, to find the essential good,
Purpose, to find true goals, for lasting values,
Honesty, to hold and do what's right in Thy sight.
Humility, to know my weakness and mistakes,
Strength, to meet the increasing daily demands,
Recognition, to see the worth of a colleague's sincere plan.
Cooperation, with all who share this drive,
Confidence, to always press forward when the cause is just.
Independence, if needs be to stand alone, when my conscience says, "I must."
Gratitude, for this great privilege to serve my country and the world.
Spiritual, awareness of our Nation's pledge "In God we trust."
And so, dear Lord,
I thank Thee for the bountiful blessing I and my loved ones have received
These dozen years and more that I have served in Congress.
I pledge, with grateful heart, my loyal service, that
Thy will shall come to pass
On earth as it is in heaven
And that
Enduring peace shall rule the hearts and deeds of all mankind

Christmas 1962
(By Lydia Yeomans Doyle)

It's not the gifts; it's not the bustle;
It's not the excitement; nor is it the rustle
Of tissue, tinsel, and trappings;
It's not the mystery of folks about you.
But it is the belonging, the caring and sharing;
All the glad fellowship that fills the air.
It's the feeling of oneness, the spirit outreaching
For God is my Father, all men my brothers.
And Christmas means loving.
One day is a symbol;
But love is a blessing that lasts through the years.

Remarks by Representative Smith

Of California

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I, too, have lost a close personal friend in the passing of CLYDE DOYLE. I wish to associate myself with all the fine remarks that have been made here today in tribute to the memory of Mr. DOYLE, and to say that I know of no individual that I have known over the years I have known Mr. DOYLE who is more deserving of these fine remarks that have been made here in tribute to his memory.

I first met CLYDE some years ago, long before I came to Congress, in connection with some legal matters we had to discuss in California. At that time, as a member of the bar, I learned of the high respect and esteem the attorneys and the judges and the Bar Association of Los Angeles had for Mr. DOYLE. Then when I came back here we became closer friends.

I certainly agree that there is no more able, honest, and pleasant individual that I have had the pleasure of associating with here than CLYDE DOYLE. He was well respected in California as he was in this body. He was esteemed as a great American because of the wonderful work he has done as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

As my colleagues the gentlemen from California [Mr. Shelley and Mr. Sisk] and others have said, I have never heard CLYDE DOYLE make an unfriendly remark against a colleague or anyone else during the time I have known him. We have lost a fine colleague and an able Member of the House of Representatives.

Mrs. Smith joins me in expressing our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their daughter.

Remarks by Representative Stratton

Of New York

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret and sorrow that I rise to join in paying tribute to my late friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California, member of our Committee on Armed Services. It is difficult for me to realize he has left us because only yesterday when we were debating the legislation from our committee, CLYDE was sitting in his accustomed seat alongside the table, and although the position which I took and the position which he took were different, I had occasion to consult with him several times during the day, and his advice and counsel were most helpful and were always given in a kindly and considerate way. In this sense his participation yesterday on his last day of service here was, I think, typical of the service he has always given in this body, a service which was devoted, a service which was informed, a service which was dedicated in its application to the questions before the House, and yet a service which was always rendered with kindly consideration and with a respect for the views and opinions of the other person.

The distinguished majority whip has referred to CLYDE DOYLE'S diary. I had occasion yesterday to notice some of the insertions that he was making in it as the debate progressed. I would certainly agree with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Boggs] that it would be a great addition to the history of this body in the days to come if that diary could be published so that the American people might follow the deliberations of this body as seen through the eyes of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE].

I remember an example of the devotion and kindliness which have been referred to here so often today, when I first came to this body as a freshman Member. I remember Congressman DOYLE taking several of us aside behind the rail and spending 10 or 15 minutes to describe to us some of the traditions of the House of Representatives and to counsel and to advise us as how we might become effective legislators. It was a great thrill to me shortly thereafter to be assigned to the Committee on Armed Services where he was already a distinguished member and to be able to work with him on the measures relating to our national security.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Johansen] has already referred to the fact that although Congressman DOYLE was a kindly and friendly person, he was nevertheless a very effective legislator. I recall serving on a subcommittee of which he was chairman. He proved himself to be a very effective, a very precise, and a very determined interrogator of witnesses before our committee, and he came up with a report that solved a complex and highly complicated question. In the same fashion CLYDE DOYLE served his country and this Congress as a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. Anyone who knew CLYDE DOYLE would know it was possible to hate communism with a deadly hatred, and to be devoted to exposing the Communist philosophy and the Communist conspiracy in every possible way, while at the same time respecting the rights and the freedoms of those individuals who might be appearing before that committee. If there ever was a man who leaned over backward to be kindly and considerate to all that man was CLYDE DOYLE. Certainly, he embodied the combination of a determination to root out both Communist and Fascist philosophies with that fundamental sense of fairness which is so much a part of our American heritage.

Reference has already been made to the fact that he lost a son in the last war and that that fact always was in his heart and in a very real way inspired much of his activity. Certainly we can regard his service to the country in this body and his quiet passing while he was still serving here, as typical of the same kind of dedicated service and the same kind of patriotic sacrifice for one's country that had been represented by his own son.

CLYDE GILMAN DOYLE

We who are in this body, could well be proud if our service here could ever in some small way match the dedication and devotion embodied by CLYDE DOYLE. Of him it can well and truly be said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou now into the glory of thy Lord."

Remarks by Representative Gavin

Of Pennsylvania

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that we record the passing of our very good friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California.

I counted CLYDE as my very dear friend. He was very conscientious in his work, deeply interested in all things that concerned the welfare of his State and Nation.

His lines of friendship extended to all elements of our social life. He was a man who contributed much to the life of the area in which he lived and the great State of California which he represented.

His service in the Congress won him deep respect and the great admiration and commendation of the Members on both sides of the aisle.

He was a very kindly, friendly man, always glad to see one, and always pleased when any act or deed of his added to the enrichment of our lives.

He had the highest concepts of citizenship; a firm believer in our American way of life with deep faith in the principles and ideals of our Government. It can be said of him that he was an outstanding Member of Congress and a great American.

In all his actions he moved with ease and courtesy and respected in others the qualities he possessed himself—sincerity of conviction and frankness of expression.

So today it is with a feeling of great sorrow that we in the House, who were privileged to serve with him, record his passing.

I shall always remember him for his many acts of kindness that indicated his friendship and good will toward me and all the Members of the House. I considered him one of my best friends.

I extend to his family my deepest and most sincere sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Gubser

Of California

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, a kinder man than CLYDE DOYLE has never lived, nor has one been more deeply respected.

The dictionary defines wisdom as "ability to judge soundly on facts as they relate to life."

CLYDE DOYLE was, then, the very essence of wisdom. His knowledge was great, and it was greater because he related it to life. CLYDE DOYLE loved life, and he loved his fellow men. His every action, his total conduct, showed deep affection for humanity.

I was privileged to serve under his chairmanship on the Subcommittee To Investigate Military Discharges. CLYDE DOYLE'S principal concern throughout those lengthy and exhaustive hearings was for the young man who was drafted at an early and tender age, committed an indiscretion and would be forced throughout his lifetime to endure the stigma of an undesirable discharge and the economic problems which go with it. CLYDE DOYLE'S recommendations represented a wise compromise between the necessarily rigid requirements of military discipline and a delicate understanding of human frailty and dignity.

CLYDE DOYLE was sincerely dedicated to the service of his country. He viewed every issue with an open mind and in an entirely unbiased manner. He was always ready to listen to a colleague and give his advice when it was sought, and his advice invariably proved to be the course of wisdom. To me, CLYDE DOYLE was a perfect symbol of goodness, honesty, and fairness.

Remarks by Representative Jones

Of Missouri

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, while it would be difficult, if not impossible to add anything to the tributes that have been expressed here today, I cannot let this opportunity pass without paying my respects to the man whom I have known for the last 14 years.

When I came to Congress, CLYDE DOYLE and I had a mutual friend, a former Missourian, who at that time was a client of his. It was through this mutual acquaintance that we became friends. This friendship and close association has grown throughout the years.

As has been stated before, we knew CLYDE DOYLE as a Christian gentleman, a man who was not only kind but most considerate. It has been said previously, but it will bear repeating; he is one of the few men I know of that I never heard say an unkind thing of another individual. He was a forgiving man, and, as a previous speaker said, his interest in trying to be helpful to those who were in distress has been evidenced on many occasions.

As CLYDE and I discussed the operation of Congress, many times he referred to the notes he made from day to day. I often told him that some day his notes would reflect what had actually happened here in Congress. As he and I discussed this matter, I always contended that our Congressional Record is not a true reflection of what actually occurs in the House, with the extensions, the revisions, the expunging, and the various changes that take place. But in those notes that CLYDE DOYLE made I think he reflects what actually happened here. He has recorded the important events, as well as some of the trivialities that have made this body the interesting forum which it has become. I would commend the suggestion of our majority leader, our majority whip, and others who have indicated they would like to see a record made, for posterity to enjoy, from the remarks that CLYDE DOYLE had recorded in those notes of his.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I say that in the loss of CLYDE DOYLE this House has lost one of its most valuable Members; his district has lost a conscientious, hard working, and understanding Representative whose value I think was known to the people there, as indicated by the results of the last election. He told me that in the last election he received the largest majority he had ever received.

Mrs. Jones and I join in expressing our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle, her daughter, and grandchildren, who have lost a kind father and grandfather whose memory will be kindly cherished throughout the years by all who were privileged to know CLYDE DOYLE.

Remarks by Representative Schadeberg

Of Wisconsin

Mr. SCHADEBERG. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of CLYDE DOYLE came to me as shock as I listened to my radio on the way to my office this morning.

While it was not my privilege to have known Mr. DOYLE over the years, our association with each other as members of the Committee on Un-American Activities gave me a profound insight into the character and spirit of this great American who was dedicated to the service of his people and the cause of freedom.

Beneath the calm exterior of genuine and warm humility was a child of God who knew the meaning of love for his fellow man; who had concern for the principles of justice and decency; respect for the dignity and rights of all men; and who possessed an unwavering determination to do what was right as God gave him to see and know that right.

He was kind to his colleagues and associates. He was kind to those he felt impelled by conviction to oppose.

I have been with him in hearings in which he displayed compassion and patience to witnesses that characterized maturity in judgment and character befitting of the true patriot and man of faith. Many times his compassion was returned by vituperation and contempt of the meanest sort. Yet uncouth men could not soil his dignity and stature.

I do not know the denomination of the church to which Mr. DOYLE gave his loyalty and support. I suspect that it was secondary to the fact that he felt impelled to make his testimony as first of all a child of God. Indicative of his sincerity is this incident I relate to you which I am sure he never intended I should speak to others as being unusual or in any way a support of his own faith.

He told me shortly after I arrived in Congress that he tried to be present for the opening of the sessions of the House because he felt the need for the prayers offered by our good Chaplain. Mr. DOYLE was present with regularity. Today's opening of this session was marked by his absence. Yet in a truer sense he was with us and will be with us to inspire each of us to greater dedication and to acceptance of our responsibilities as those entrusted with the sacred task of representing freemen.

It is impossible for me to say any profound words in his behalf. Nothing I could say on this floor today could add to the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him intimately nor detract from the man who so nobly served among us. He has spoken with his own life in words more beautiful and meaningful than could come from the lips of those who were recipients of his friendship but could not comprehend the depth of character that made him so beloved.

This was his faith, expressed in the words of John Luckey McCreery:

THERE IS NO DEATH
(By John Luckey McCreery)

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some other shore
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine for evermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain, or mellow fruit
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved things away,
And then we call them "dead."

Born into that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them—the same
Except in sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead!

May God richly bless the bereaved members of his family.

Remarks by Representative Baldwin

Of California

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned earlier, CLYDE DOYLE this year, at the beginning of this session of Congress, was elected vice president of the Thursday Morning House Prayer Breakfast Club. The fact that he was unanimously elected to that position by the 40 or 50 House Members who are in regular attendance at that Thursday morning breakfast meeting is an indication of the great trust that those Members placed in CLYDE DOYLE. He was a man of deep religious and moral convictions and a man of deep compassion. The people throughout the country look to the Members of Congress to provide leadership, to provide guidance for their youngsters to follow. In CLYDE DOYLE they had a person who met that test from every standpoint, and I am sure the high school and grammar school youngsters in his district who had occasion to meet CLYDE DOYLE or to know of his background and of his moral convictions could certainly pick him as a model and their parents would be proud of that decision. Those of us who came to Congress from California, as members of the California delegation, found that CLYDE DOYLE was one to whom we would automatically look for guidance. He was a man who gave equal guidance to people on this side of the aisle as well as on that side of the aisle, because to him there was no aisle.

There was in his view just what was right and what was wrong. He fought for what was right according to the high standards that he set for himself. Yet at the same time, despite those high standards, he did not look down on any man or any woman. He shared their problems with them and tried to work with them in solving these problems.

Mr. Speaker, my wife joins with me in extending our deepest sympathy to his widow and his family.

Remarks by Representative Rogers

Of Colorado

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, we were all saddened with the passing of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE.

It was not my privilege to serve with our distinguished Member on any committee. But shortly after I came to Congress I learned to know CLYDE DOYLE. He was typical of those from the West who have an open hand, a smiling and understanding manner. He was a humble man and he expressed himself for the benefit of all mankind.

Throughout his lifetime he had the privilege of visiting and living in my area. We discussed those times, we reminisced of the West and what contributions he had made. We understand and know that he was sympathetic to those ex-servicemen whom he felt had gotten a bad break in their lifetime.

CLYDE DOYLE knew many of my good friends in the congressional district which it is my privilege to present. Each time that we adjourned and Congress reconvened CLYDE DOYLE always asked about his friends. He wanted to know how they were doing. That was the spirit of CLYDE DOYLE.

Mr. Speaker, we shall miss him in the coming years as he has contributed so much to this Nation, its patriotism, and its well-being as a good American citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Remarks by Representative Chenoweth

Of Colorado

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly shocked and saddened this morning when I learned of the passing of our beloved colleague CLYDE DOYLE. I had visited with him just a couple of days ago and he appeared to be in excellent health. I want to join in paying tribute to his memory. I also wish to extend my sympathy to our colleagues from California in this great loss which they have sustained.

Mr. Speaker, California has not alone sustained this loss, but the entire Nation has suffered an irreparable loss. All of us are going to greatly miss CLYDE and his cordial greetings.

Mr. Speaker, I have never known a more conscientious Member of this House or a harder worker than CLYDE DOYLE. He was anxious to serve his country to the utmost of his ability. I know it was a matter of great personal concern to him as to whether or not he was fully and adequately discharging his duties and responsibilities as a Member of this House.

We had mutual friends in Colorado, and we used to talk about them frequently. In fact, I seldom met CLYDE without stopping for a visit.

I recall the strenuous efforts he made to get a bill passed which would assist those who had received military discharges which were other than honorable. CLYDE felt that an injustice was being done in many of these cases, and that we owed these boys the obligation of trying to correct these discharges. I discussed this legislation with him many times, and this was a matter close to his heart.

Mr. Speaker, I called upon CLYDE for a personal favor not so long ago. He went out of his way to help me in a matter which meant nothing whatever to him or to his district. CLYDE was a true Christian, and was always happy to extend a helping hand to others.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a faithful public servant and served his people well. It was a great privilege to have him as a friend and to work with him over the years. Mrs. Chenoweth joins with me in extending our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of the family.

Remarks by Representative McFall

Of California

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, all of us have lost a fine friend in CLYDE DOYLE. Our country and the people of his district have lost an extraordinary Representative. Missing from the seat he always occupied will be one of the finest examples of what a Member should be and should do. He leaves a standard of ability, honesty, kindness, and gentleness for all of us to live by. As he certainly would have wished, he was with us, working for his beloved country until the very end, an end that came as gently and as easily and with the same dignity that he had lived his life. His customary chair is empty, but we know he now occupies another chair of honor alongside his Maker.

My wife joins me and all of his many friends in extending to his wonderful wife and family our deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative O'Hara

Of Illinois

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, my life has been enriched by my friendship with CLYDE DOYLE. When over the radio this morning I heard of his passing I was shocked and grieved.

I have listened to the tributes paid CLYDE DOYLE in this Chamber today and in every utterance has been a marked sincerity and the reflection of deep personal grief. To us all CLYDE DOYLE stood for the personification of the spirit of self-abnegation. We all sensed that he was never thinking of himself, but always of his mission on earth as he saw it and of his service to his God, his country, and his fellow man.

I do not think that CLYDE DOYLE ever thought a harsh or evil thing of another human being. Always he practiced charity and understanding. A year or two ago the Committee on which he served, the Committee on Un-American Activities, had commissioned him to revise its rules. CLYDE DOYLE came to me several times as he did to others of his colleagues, saying, "Please go over this draft; if you can make any further suggestion to insure absolute fairness please give me that suggestion." I know how earnestly and conscientiously he worked on that task.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expression of deepest sympathy to his fine wife and to his daughter—and we all remember the great grief that was his and theirs when he lost his only son in World War II—and I wish also to join in expressing the faith that the soul of CLYDE DOYLE is now reunited with the Master whom he served with obedience, in thought and in deed, every day, every hour of his sojourn on earth. I can say no more. I am bowed with the grief that possesses me. This House has lost one of the noblest characters that ever served within its historic walls.

Remarks by Representative Pirnie

Of New York

Mr. PIRNIE. Mr. Speaker, the tributes to which we have listened today have certainly come from the heart. The sudden death of our distinguished colleague from California is most assuredly a distinct loss to this House and the Nation.

As a fellow member of the Committee on Armed Services it has been my privilege to work with this fine man on a day-to-day basis and to observe at firsthand his true character and ability.

CLYDE DOYLE served his district with complete dedication, bringing to his work a deep sense of personal concern. We affectionately recall his gentle manner, always expressive of a sincere consideration of others. His faithful attendance record is well known and attests his complete devotion to his task. Few Members have felt more keenly the responsibility which is ours in the Congress. He was proud of the trust placed in him by his people, and he never betrayed that trust.

These fine qualities of mind and heart assure that this modest, kindly, and able public servant will be long and affectionately remembered. We extend to his fine family our heartfelt sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Olsen

Of Montana

Mr. OLSEN. Mr. Speaker, the House is indeed in sorrow today. We have suffered a great loss. CLYDE DOYLE genuinely loved his fellow man. I think that every man has experienced, the same as I, CLYDE DOYLE's extending a favor without even being asked. He loved so well that he wanted me to share his friends, so he would write those whom he knew in Montana and he wrote me copies to inform me of his writing them so that I would become acquainted with and share his dear friends who live in my State.

He not only would not hurt anyone, but no one ever heard him say an unkind thing of anyone. CLYDE DOYLE had a kind and generous word about everyone of whom he spoke. There was once an occasion when I said in his presence an unkind word about another man whom he knew. He did not rebuke me but he corrected me. He gave me an example of how to get along better, and I think he gave all the Members that kind of example. He would go the extra mile for everyone. He gave of himself always.

I liken him to Peter the Apostle. "Silver and gold have I none, but I give what I have. I give myself." CLYDE DOYLE did better than that, because what little silver and gold he had he shared that, too. He was so very Christian. He pleasantly forgave. He exhibited his forgiveness from a generous heart, a happy heart, and it was exhibited by his glowing, friendly countenance. CLYDE is one of God's own, and he has gone home.

Remarks by Representative Younger

Of California

Mr. YOUNGER. Mr. Speaker, we have all lost a true friend in the passing of CLYDE DOYLE. I was perhaps one of the last of our colleagues to visit with CLYDE. We sat together at the same table with Mrs. Doyle last night at the American Legion banquet. He told us of his plans to celebrate his 50th wedding anniversary next year and of his future plans for the House prayer breakfast.

I left the table about 10 o'clock. There was no indication whatsoever of the possibility of his being called to leave on an earlier schedule. I left the table with the remark, "I'll see you at breakfast in the morning," and his cheery reply was, "I'll be there."

CLYDE DOYLE as a man, a husband, a father, and a colleague was a dedicated Christian gentleman in every sense of the word. Mrs. Younger joins me in expressing our deep sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and their family.

Remarks by Representative Flynt

Of Georgia

Mr. FLYNT. Mr. Speaker, I join the gentleman from California in this tribute to the memory of a beloved friend, and an outstanding Member of this body, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, late a Representative from the State of California. With a feeling of profound sorrow and sadness this morning we heard the news of his untimely passing. CLYDE DOYLE was, indeed, an outstanding Member of this body. He was also a great American. He ably represented his State and district for nine terms.

It is particularly significant that our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, was present on the floor of the House on yesterday during the proceedings in this body. His attendance record was one of which any Member would well be proud. He was present and cast his vote on the last rollcall taken in this body during his lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, it is equally significant that his plans for today would have included attendance at the regular Thursday morning prayer breakfast participated in by Members of the House of Representatives.

CLYDE DOYLE was by some standards what might have been termed a quiet man. Notwithstanding his quietness and serenity, he possessed a truly dynamic personality.

CLYDE DOYLE was an able Representative. He was a truly great and patriotic American. He was a real man in the finest sense of that word. He was also a Christian gentleman. His life was an inspiration to all who were privileged to come in contact with him, to know him, and to be associated with him, and to love him.

This body in which he served, his Nation, and the State that he represented are better because of his participation and the contributions he made during a long and useful life.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Flynt and our family join in extending our heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and other members of his family.

Remarks by Representative Utt

Of California

Mr. UTT. Mr. Speaker, once again one of our friends and colleagues has crossed the river that marks the boundary of that unknown shore. CLYDE DOYLE and I were very closely associated for more than 20 years before either one of us came to the Congress of the United States. He, like myself, was a native son of California. We shared many experiences and pleasures together. He truly was one of God's noblemen. He was sincere, he was honest, he was dedicated. I know that he will be happy in the reward to which he has gone. We had a very close relationship in the Congress and, although we may have differed from time to time, there never was a time that that disagreement was not a reasonable disagreement and one which always had a happy ending.

Mrs. Utt joins me in extending to his wife and family our deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Libonati

Of Illinois

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, the death of CLYDE DOYLE closed the career of a person who in his simplicity of understanding contributed much to the appreciation of those dedicated practices which many men feel through Americanism, a basic understanding of the common American in his acceptance of his patriotic devotion to his country.

CLYDE DOYLE was not an exhibitionist. We all know that he served on a committee that probably covers the most delicate area within which a legislative body can operate. Never has he personally been criticized for any practice on that committee, and it was a most difficult committee on which to serve. His service on that and other committees has contributed much to the acceptance of the procedures of the House of Representatives.

CLYDE DOYLE as a lawyer never placed his legal and professional abilities beyond the scope of human liberty. CLYDE DOYLE was a patriot because of the fact that he understood the force of Americanism that has contributed to the welfare of his fellow men. His service on the Subversives Committee, of which he was a member for so many years, indicated to him the purposes of the committee within the limitation of the legislative exactments of this body.

CLYDE DOYLE in his private life, in his civic life, stood up for and expounded the religious principles in which he believed and was active in his church, and was active at all times in combating and exposing the teachings of communism.

Few men in their lifetime have accumulated the thanks, the honor, and the respect that CLYDE DOYLE has in his native State of California. His civic activities brought him in contact with the most unfortunate, also with the youth and with the underprivileged. He actively participated in programs looking to the betterment and amelioration of the lot of unfortunate human beings. No greater service can a man give than to direct the destinies of the young, to bring to them an understanding of life's problems so they may be able to cope with the exigencies and necessities of life as it unfolds before them and lead them to an honorable manhood and womanhood. That is the service that CLYDE DOYLE gave to his fellow Americans in their youth in his community. He gracefully accepted the civic responsibilities that fall upon the man in public life, and the way he carried out those principles and responsibilities marks him as a man of possessive mind.

I am proud to have been associated with him, especially in the breakfast group. It was there we could appreciate his breadth of mind and his philosophy as reflected in his interpretation of Biblical quotations which stamp him as a man whom all Christians can respect. We know that he himself derived benefits from his reflection and study that made him a happy man in life.

To his lovely wife Lydia, to his daughter Dorothy, and to his grandsons Dan-Doyle Stanton and Clyde Douglas, we extend our heartfelt sympathy. And I dedicate to his memory this poem:

The winds of fate have blown away
A kindly soul whose words did sway
In Halls of Congress e'en today
Those who treasure the American way.

To his family and friends in life I say that every member of the Illinois delegation extends his condolence on this sad day.

Remarks by Representative Hosmer

Of California

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, my life also has been enriched by the friendship of CLYDE DOYLE. Ours was a true friendship which, unlike that of many of you, began in adversity in 1950, when CLYDE DOYLE and I contested each other as the candidates of our respective parties for election to Congress from California's then 18th district. It was a spirited campaign, a campaign which brought us together on the same platform in personal combat, so to speak, on numerous occasions. On each of those occasions I found that I came off best, not because I won the arguments, far from that, but because CLYDE DOYLE gave me a little of himself on each occasion and taught me a little more of the way of true Americanism, true patriotism, devotion, and dedication, both to humanity and to our country.

At the end of that contest the score was close, a difference of some 1,850 votes out of 200,000. I stayed in California. CLYDE came back to Washington again.

Two years later, following the 1950 reapportionment, the old 18th Congressional District of California became two new districts, one the 18th and the other the district which CLYDE always and fondly referred to as "California's great 23d District."

When I came to Congress in 1953, CLYDE welcomed me as a brother and as a friend. He was as kind, helpful, and considerate as anyone could possibly be to a freshman Member of this Congress. But that kind of feeling toward one of his fellows, his helpfulness and consideration did not cease after a few months. It continued with me just as it has with each of our colleagues down through the years. I know that each and every one of us, and the thousands of people from every walk of life who knew, loved, and respected him, feels not only his own keen personal sense of loss and deprivation by CLYDE's quiet passing, but also seeks to share the burden of greater loss that inescapably must bear so heavily upon his lovely widow, Lydia, and the surviving members of his family.

All of us today, I believe, can give thanks that we have been privileged to have been associated with CLYDE DOYLE, a man who loved and revered Abraham Lincoln and who strived in every way, during every day to emulate the fine qualities of that great American President.

My family joins me in this expression of our deep sense of loss, and our most reverent condolences to Mrs. Doyle and CLYDE's family.

Remarks by Representative Matthews

Of Florida

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in expressing sadness because of the passing of our beloved friend, CLYDE DOYLE.

References have already been made to his activities in connection with our weekly prayer meeting. I remember so well a talk he made to us some months ago in our prayer meeting. The challenge of that talk was a personal challenge to himself to live according to the tenets of Christianity. He in his successful efforts to lead a life of personal piety reminded me so much of another departed Christian colleague, the Honorable Percy Priest, of Tennessee.

I can say, Mr. Speaker, that CLYDE DOYLE, and men like Percy Priest, have inspired me since I have been in the Congress to endeavor to lead a life in accordance with high religious principles. I know of no man in the Congress who strived more successfully for personal piety than did CLYDE DOYLE. There was no sophistry in his makeup; there was no arrogance in his demeanor; there was no hatred in his heart. He was gentle; he was kind. The poet has said the evil that men do lives after them and that the good is often interred with their bones. I believe there was no evil in this man CLYDE DOYLE, and I believe we shall remember him only because of his noble personality. Each year in the House we have a debate on the activities of our committees. We hear comments, frequently critical, for example, of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. And, I remember time and time again I have said, in conversations with people, that if the citizens of America knew CLYDE DOYLE, who serves on the House Committee on Un-American Activities, I do not see how they could fail to have the high confidence in that committee that I personally do. He was fair; he was honorable in every decision that he made. I think in our democracy that it is not enough for men to be free and to be educated, but they must be good men, and of all of my colleagues in the Congress, I know of no one who was better than CLYDE DOYLE. He was a good man.

We, in Florida, Mr. Speaker, extent to the great State of California our profound sympathy because of your loss, and we pray that the blessings of divine providence be with the loved ones of our departed friend.

Remarks by Representative Bell

Of California

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, there is very little that I can add to what has already been said so sincerely and effectively about my good friend, CLYDE DOYLE. However, at the expense of being repetitious, I would like to make a few comments about him.

Besides being an outstanding legislator, CLYDE DOYLE was a very friendly and understanding human being. Coming from my home State of California, CLYDE'S sincere affection for all Members extended across party lines. When I first arrived here in Washington in my freshman term, to meet the problems of a new life, CLYDE DOYLE was one of the first of my colleagues to put out a friendly hand. He was always ready and willing to answer my or any other new Member's questions and to make suggestions that would be helpful. He continued this very kind and sincere approach not only to all the Members, but to the many problems that confront the House. CLYDE always seemed to prefer the friendly, nonpartisan method of solving our problems.

My wife's and my heart go out to CLYDE DOYLE'S family in their bereavement.

Remarks by Representative Reifel

Mr. REIFEL. Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to make the balance of my life better because CLYDE DOYLE lived.

It was reassuring to me, when I came here 2 years ago—my first term in this great and august body—to find this man, whenever I came to the opening of the House, here in his accustomed place. Then, at our Thursday morning prayer breakfast group it was further reassuring when on one occasion as our speaker, to have a witness for Christ stand before us, and, as that witness bare his heart and with tears streaming down his cheeks, to remind us that his trust was in God. I thought as I listened to him that if each of us, the 435 Members of this House, would be here when our Chaplain opened this great body's deliberations with prayer, what a great force it would be in the free world. Since his admonition to us of the Thursday morning prayer breakfast group that he needed to be here in the Chamber to get his strength for the day by the inspiration that comes from the words of the Chaplain, I have tried as diligently as possible to likewise be here on the opening of our sessions.

Mr. Speaker, he was a man who made one feel greater than he. This was a real heartening and reassuring attribute for another to greet one in this manner, especially as one who is in his first term in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, only last Thursday morning we were sitting by each other. I was given the privilege to give the talk at the prayer breakfast. In my presentation I related a saying among the Indian-Americans that went something like this:

Great Spirit, grant that I may not criticize my neighbor until I have walked a mile in his moccasins.

Mr. Speaker, I think that statement could have been authored by our departed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. Only yesterday he said, "I will see you tomorrow at the prayer breakfast." As I was dressing this morning, one of the things to which I looked forward was to be with him. Then while listening to the radio and TV it was announced that he had gone to join his fathers.

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday morning as he was with the rest of us paying for our breakfast, he pulled out some bright, shiny Lincoln head pennies. He said, "Ben, these are brandnew pennies that I got upstairs." He said, "Whenever a young man or a young woman writes to me, I put one of the brandnew pennies in the letter of reply and tell him or her that this comes from the greatest nation in the world, a God-fearing nation," and that he made other appropriate remarks with respect to the man whose image is imprinted on the penny.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my deepest sympathy to the Members of the California delegation and to the family of this great person by whom I was privileged to be called a friend.

Remarks by Representative Hall

Of Missouri

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, after all of these beautiful tributes to our departed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, one could very easily succumb to the admonition of Lord Lister, who said:

When the lark sings on high, lesser birds cease their twittering lest they miss one miracle note.

But that does not satisfy those who hearts are overflowing with the memory of CLYDE DOYLE, a man who always tempered justice with mercy and who only last week in walking from the Committee on Armed Services on which we both serve, put his hand on my arm and said "My estimation of you is that you are a gentleman."

I think perhaps I shall try to spend the rest of my years living up to this stimulus by a busy man; one who served his people, his family, his Congress, and his fellow man on two committees and, as has been so well said here in our weekly prayer breakfast group.

I also was privileged to serve last year by appointment of the chairman of our Committee on Armed Services with CLYDE on a special committee for the National Security Agency. I found him delving but understanding and always, as our Speaker has said, kindly. He was persistent and loyal; certainly a worthy adversary but a great teacher and a personable friend and counselor.

He died in the traces, truly just as much in the service of his country as did his departed son during World War II. He died with his boots on and as I used to be wont to advise some patients, " 'twere better to do than to lie down and wait."

Only last week he rendered yeoman service, in the absence of Tad Walter on the House Committee on Un-American Activities authorization and appropriation. Certainly he did the same yesterday on the procurement bill out of Committee on Armed Services.

As a doctor who has of necessity had more than his share, perhaps, of close brushes with death in the service, in the operating room, and in the hospitals of our Nation, I am glad and thankful unto our Master that he passed away peacefully in his sleep. This is probably a just reward on earth for a man who has given so much and who grew out of convictions of his own soul. No man stands so tall as he who stoops to lift up a boy.

I know that our good Lord above will receive him and rest his soul forever in his embraceable bosom.

Mrs. Hall and I extend our sympathy to Mrs. Doyle, their daughter, the grandchildren, and the bereaved.

Remarks by Representative Beermann

Of Nebraska

Mr. BEERMANN. Mr. Speaker, when I heard on the television this morning that Congressman CLYDE DOYLE had left our midst several incidents flashed through my mind. I was not so fortunate as to have worked as closely as other Members with our departed colleague and so benefit from his wise experience. But I can pay personal tribute to his gentlemanly conduct and inborn sense of courtesy and graciousness. I entered the House of Representatives 2 years ago and was given the honor of delivering the George Washington Farewell Address on the anniversary of his birth. I confess that I approached my assignment with some trepidation. However, later that same day CLYDE DOYLE was gracious enough to telephone me and was very complimentary on my recitation. Perhaps this courtesy was only a minor act, Mr. Speaker, but I want to state that it endeared Mr. DOYLE forever to me. It convinced me that he was one of the most sincere, genteel, and considerate men privileged to enter this great House of Representatives.

Mrs. Beermann and I extend our sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the other members of the family.

Remarks by Representative Mahon

Of Texas

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not speak at length, but I did want to make reference to an incident that happened a couple of days ago in this Chamber. I was not on the floor yesterday regularly, and I did not see the late CLYDE DOYLE during the proceedings. But the day before when I entered the House he motioned me to his side as I came into the Chamber and he said, "George, I want you to be more regular in attendance at these Thursday morning prayer meetings at the Capitol." I pointed out that I had been at the national prayer breakfast at the Mayflower Hotel earlier in the year and that I had periodically attended the prayer breakfast on Thursday mornings at the Capitol. He said that that was all well and good but that he wanted me to be more regular in attendance. I promised to do so, and I shall keep my promise.

I point this little incident out because it gives an insight into the character and personality of our departed friend. The incident which I have described was typical of this wonderful man. I want to join in tribute to the memory of a man of such stature as CLYDE DOYLE.

Of course, through the years I had seen CLYDE DOYLE at his post of duty in the House of Representatives. We had many common interests in the field of national defense, and we discussed these problems from time to time.

I shall not proceed further. I know many of the friends of the late CLYDE DOYLE will read this issue of the Record with a great deal of interest. It has been a privilege to join in tributes to the memory of this good man and to extend sympathy to his family left behind.

Remarks by Representative Harris

Of Arkansas

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I, too, am deeply grieved by the loss of our distinguished friend and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, suddenly over the night. It has been my privilege and high honor to have served here in the House with CLYDE for almost 17 years. This was the beginning of our 17th year together.

I want to associate myself with the other Members in the high and appropriate tribute that has been paid to our friend today. Each of us could go on and out of our own experience relate many, many incidents such as have been related here today.

He did not have to write me a note or give me reference about a friend of mine that he saw in California, in his own district, or give me the names of the individuals and suggest that I write them, that they wanted to hear from me. There are so many of those details and little things in life which, in my judgment, really make up the living of an individual as a human being.

So we might emulate the life and character of CLYDE DOYLE. I shall miss him, as I know other Members of this House miss him, because of what he was and what he has meant to us.

Mrs. Harris and I join others in extending our deepest sympathies to Mrs. Doyle and the family in their bereavement.

Remarks by Representative Corman

Of California

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, the passing of CLYDE DOYLE brings sorrow to each of us. He so aptly admonished us that our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are and he inspired us by giving his best. It always seemed to me that he had another principle, that the men around him deserved kindness and love, and of these qualities he gave. I believe that, more than any man with whom I have worked, he followed the 11th commandment of our Lord.

My wife and I join in the expression of deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Remarks by Representative Philbin

Of Massachusetts

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I am greatly shocked and deeply saddened by the untimely passing of my dear friend and beloved colleague, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. His loss is truly an irreparable one.

Only yesterday I talked with him, and he seemed to be in vigorous health. It is almost impossible to realize that he is gone.

CLYDE DOYLE was one of the outstanding Members of the House of Representatives and of our great Committee on Armed Services. I had the honor and distinction to serve with him for years. He was a member of Subcommittee No. 2 of the Committee on Armed Services. There was never a more diligent, more capable, or more dedicated or conscientious man on our committee, nor was there ever a man who demonstrated such high qualities of personality and character in the House of Representatives.

A brilliant lawyer and an indefatigable worker, a trusted friend and counselor, CLYDE DOYLE distinguished himself greatly in this body and in our committee.

He was a man of great and unusual humility and exalted character. He was endowed with a lofty sense of honor and a conscientiousness in his work, together with an almost incredible industry and painstaking application to duty.

He served with a zeal and high purpose and a spirit of nobility that certainly has never been excelled in the history of this Congress. He was a man of forthright principles, humane, forward looking, and just. His strong sense of justice and his great mind and heart prompted him always to strive with compassion and with extraordinary zeal to serve the ordinary people of his great district and of his State and our Nation. CLYDE DOYLE was devoted to human beings and to the cause of humanity and to the lofty purposes of government. He was resolute and unswerving in his patriotism and in his self-sacrificing willingness to labor, even at great cost to his own health and well-being, for the security and defense of our country, and for the broader, humane, social and economic policies and programs, and the advancement of the cause of the people which were always so dear to his heart, and which were such a real part of his very being.

Mr. Speaker, I realize full well that mere words are quite inadequate to portray the depth of my personal sorrow at the passing of this fine public servant and dear friend, or to portray the very high quality of his unselfish service to our country and its people.

He will be sorely missed in our committee where he made such outstanding and memorable contributions.

His name will long be remembered in the Halls of this great legislative body where he so faithfully and so constructively served for such a long period of time with such outstanding distinction.

Mr. Speaker, to know CLYDE DOYLE was to respect, admire, and love him. The sincerity and nobility of his friendship and deep spiritual fellowship will ever be treasured by those of us who were fortunate enough to know him and work with him.

It is, indeed, with a very heavy heart that I join his dear, devoted wife, beloved family, and his friends and constituents and colleagues in mourning his sorrowful demise.

To his cherished wife and family, I tender my most heartfelt sympathy in the great sorrow that has come to them. I hope and pray that this dear, loyal friend, this trusted counselor and illustrious colleague may find peace and rest in his heavenly home.

We will miss him here in these historic Halls where he contributed so much to our work and to our country. His memory will long remain green and fresh with us as an inspiration. His gentle ways, his warm friendship, and his spirit of devotion and dedication to great tasks, will long continue to guide us.

Remarks by Representative Randall

Of Missouri

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from saying a word in eulogy about our departed colleague. Not far from where I am now standing, we sat and visited yesterday afternoon with our departed colleague during the debate on the military procurement bill. It was his preference to occupy the same seat in this Chamber, and he usually was found in that seat. This was characteristic of his regularity in everything he did—regular in attendance and regular in his devotion to duty.

At a time such as this when we look back and reflect on the characteristics of a friend who has departed, it is appropriate that we recall that he was both regular and punctual in everything he did, not only in his attendance of this body but also in his committee work. Only this morning I knew he must have been ill or that something was wrong, because we always passed in the hall, just before 10 o'clock, he going to his committee, and I going to mine. When I missed him this morning I felt at that time something was wrong that CLYDE was not on his way to his committee.

CLYDE DOYLE was a man who believed in the proposition that in order to have friends one must be a friend. He was a friend to all of us and of great help to many of us. He had the habit of keeping notes, which few of us do, of the proceedings here on the floor. One could go to him and find out what had transpired in their absence or coming in late could get an accurate account from him of what had been missed. He was on the floor every minute of every session. I recall when we were all sweating out adjournment last year about the first of October he took it upon himself to try to cheer up some of us who felt we should be back home in the campaign; he tried to be helpful by saying:

"We will be out of here this week, or at the latest in a few days." I suspect it was an effort to say this to try to keep us cheerful, because I suspect down deep in his heart he knew adjournment might not come as quickly as most of us preferred.

He was a man of great sincerity. Much can be said about him that is good.

He was a successful practicing lawyer and headed his own law firm. He had been elected to local office in his native State of California. He had been active in many civic enterprises including work for the Boy Scouts of America, hospitals for crippled children, the YMCA, and the California Philharmonic Orchestra Association. Not only was he active in the successful practice of law, but he had attained success in the field of banking. He told me of having once been accorded the nomination by the voters of both the Democratic and Republican Parties under the California cross-filing law, and in one election he had no opponent at all during the fall general election. But those were things that most of us did not know about unles there was a direct inquiry, because CLYDE was not one to tell about his successes. He was a modest man, and he was a man who was always very careful to be certain that everything he said was not to even the slightest degree an exaggeration of fact.

Just this one further thought: It is so difficult to express words of consolation to the survivors of the departed. I am sure in this instance they have a great measure of consolation in the esteem in which his colleagues held him and the feeling that every Member who knew CLYDE DOYLE unanimously respected him.

May his good soul rest in peace.

To Mrs. Doyle and the daughter, my own family joins with me in this expression of our deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Teague

Of California

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I join in every tribute made here today to the memory of CLYDE DOYLE. No statement has been exaggerated in any way.

No finer, kinder American Christian gentleman ever lived.

Remarks by Representative Bolling

Of Missouri

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a good, a sweet man. A dedicated public servant, his motives were pure, his dedication to duty intense, and his patriotism of the highest. The House and our country have suffered a grievous loss. I extend my deepest sympathy to his bereaved loved ones.

Remarks by Representative Clausen

Of California

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, to have one of our number taken from our midst by a Great Unseen Hand is, indeed, a great shock to all of us whether we had known the departed long or little. As a new Congressman from the home State of CLYDE DOYLE, I knew him only from brief acquaintance as a fine Christian gentleman. But I knew him by reputation as a great patriot for his outstanding work on the House Committee on Un-American Activities. His passing is a great loss to our Nation. I join with my colleagues in heartfelt condolences to CLYDE DOYLE'S family, and I pray that God will comfort them as only He can.

Remarks by Representative Holifield

Of California

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I join in this tribute to our beloved colleague from California, who served his State and Nation so ably for so many years in this body.

CLYDE DOYLE was a dedicated public servant in the finest tradition of the House. He worked tirelessly in performance of his representative duties for the people of his district. He was conscientious and humble, a friend of all who were privileged to serve with him.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee and the Committee on Un-American Activities, he rendered important service in strengthening our Nation against our enemies—both from outside and from within. Under his leadership the House adopted, in 1955, the Doyle resolution establishing standards of conduct for House committees in the protection of the rights of witnesses and improving committee procedures.

All of us will recall CLYDE DOYLE's motto, which appeared at the bottom of each letter he signed—"Our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are."

This simple, moving expression of faith and service symbolized CLYDE's lifetime philosophy of public service at all levels of government. His long and distinguished record of service in State positions, in civic, legal, cultural, and philanthropic work is well known in Los Angeles County and throughout California.

We will miss CLYDE—his example of dedicated service, his leadership, his cheerful smile, and genuine friendship. To his devoted wife, Lydia, and his family, Mrs. Holifield and I extend our sincere condolences in this time of sorrow.

Recently I received letters from his widow, Lydia Doyle, and his daughter, Dorothy Doyle Stanton. I am including as part of my remarks these two letters, because they describe with love and intimate knowledge the attributes, the qualities, and the noble motives of my friend, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, U.S. Representative from the 23d Congressional District of California.

The letters referred to are as follows:

MY HUSBAND, CONGRESSMAN CLYDE DOYLE

During the last 6 months I have read and reread the beautiful tributes to CLYDE that you, his colleagues, gave at the congressional memorial meeting for him, and I have meditated many sleepless nights, enveloped in the warmth of his continuing love. Yet I am still unable to put into words much of what 49 wonderful years with him taught me or how his ideals are still guiding me. His code of ethics based on these ideals is well summarized in a poem which he, and probably many of you, have found inspiring:

"Four things you must do
If you would make your record true;
To think without confusion clearly,
To love your fellow men sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God in Heaven securely."

I was about to say that CLYDE and I met in high school. While this is true, our acquaintance and friendship really began in a religious setting, for it was there that I saw his purpose and his drive most clearly revealed, and it was there that I became interested in where this young man in a hurry was going.

Since it is difficult really to understand a person without knowing something about his background, I shall fill in, as suggested, the biographical sketch of CLYDE which Congressman Sheppard so fully outlined, with characteristic incidents helpful in interpreting the man whom you knew in Congress.

CLYDE was born in Oakland, Calif., in 1887. His Irish father, who was brought to this country as a baby, was a highly skilled blacksmith with several shops in San Francisco. He invented the still-used "Good Enough" horseshoe in days when good horses were the pride of aristocrats. CLYDE'S mother, a former teacher, was a devoted, loving homemaker. During CLYDE'S early youth, his father lost all of his savings in two bank failures at a time when he was too old to begin again. The older children had all married and established homes, and they also had suffered financially, and so it was up to CLYDE to care for his parents and to get an education on his own. Though merely a boy then—a carefree boy riding happily over the Berkeley hills on his pony—he was suddenly faced with the serious problem of deciding what he was to become, how he would reach his goal, and how he would care for his parents. For the immediate future, he went to Seattle, where he lived briefly with his sister, Hessie Lorene, and her husband, the Reverend Tom Wiswell. Soon he rejoined his parents in their new home in Los Angeles.

Here, as a boy of 14, he undertook the formidable task of supporting them and of continuing his education. He swept out offices, sold papers on street corners, and worked at any employment available, at the same time carrying more solids than most schools then allowed. At this time and under these circumstances, he learned how best to use every precious moment, and he discovered the value of deep concentration and of speed reading. Often a cup of coffee was all that he could afford for breakfast, sometimes embellished by a doughnut supplied by a kind vendor who knew about his circumstances. Yet he never lost his courage or his friendly smile or greeting.

Here in Los Angeles he was to meet the man who probably had the greatest influence on his life—Judge Curtis D. Wilbur, juvenile court judge for Los Angeles County and later Secretary of the Navy. Judge Wilbur was his Sunday school teacher, his lifelong friend, and his inspiration. Patterning his life after the life of this great man, he decided to become a lawyer. Fortune, however, was to play some bitter tricks, forcing him to take several detours before he reached his goal.

In 1907 Clyde and his parents moved to Long Beach, where he finished high school. Working mornings and evenings and carrying his usual heavy academic load, he still found time to become student body president, a champion debater, a baseball pitcher, a trackman, and a singer in the high school quartet. In addition, he continued his youth group activities in connection with his church.

After graduating from high school, he saw opportunities ahead, but he also encountered heartaches, for his duty to his parents made it necessary for him to give most of his time to earning money. Cheerfully and lovingly he turned aside from his goal to become temporary YMCA secretary until an older man qualified to fill the position could be found. Shortly thereafter he became boys' secretary of the Y, and later, under his friend Judge Wilbur, probation officer in Los Angeles County. At this time he learned at firsthand the ruthless ways of big city life on the adventurous teenage boys of the city streets.

Later, while acting as head of Juvenile Hall until a trained superintendent could be found, be became better acquainted with the so-called "bad boys." His reputation for success in working with boys was growing, and he was soon named boy's director at the Junior Republic for Boys at Chino. There, on a big farm, he supervised the work program, the educational program, the government, and the religious life of the boys. With a new perspective gained in this work, came hope, for here he saw boys from broken homes and the bad environment of city streets given a new outlook on life and a chance to become good citizens. Many of these boys did become good, responsible men. Many of them have kept in touch with CLYDE through the decades that have passed.

To this experiment in boy rehabilitation in 1914 CLYDE brought his bride, Lydia Yeomans Doyle, to the little cottage on the hill built by the loving hands of the boys trained in the carpenter shop under the supervision of their instructor. Studying boy life at first hand together, the two Doyles learned that most, if not all, boys want to become respected adults and that it is, in some cases, wrong environment or failure to be understood that starts a boy in the wrong direction.

At CLYDE'S farewell party after three interesting and challenging years at the Republic, the many testimonies of both boys and instructors revealed his influence on them. One instructor said, "Personally, I have often been amazed at Mr. DOYLE'S knowledge of the most trivial characteristics of the boys in my industry. Mr. DOYLE has always set an example for both citizens and instructors with his never-changing cheerfulness and unruffled manner. He was always 'oil to troubled waters.' "

CLYDE'S superintendent commented on his characteristic—"Are you happy?" "Cheer up," and "Let's go"—as a valuable asset in dealing with both instructors and boys. Mention was made of the fact that the boys who made errors in outside competitions would often be crushed until CLYDE'S cheery "Better luck next time," made them play their hearts out and win for him. In response to these tributes and many more, CLYDE replied with thanks and appreciation and then challenged the boys: "Don't you fail by underestimating your own possibilities. Realize the fact that you can make good, and that no one can in the long run be a better man than you are."

He then explained that his last detour was over, now that he had enjoyed 3 years with them instead of the 2 years he had come for. "Now," he said, "I have got my release and I am going to make good. I am going to realize my ambition to become the best lawyer possible. I want to make good as a lawyer in order to be in a stronger position to be a friend to man. I don't know what it will be, but I know, fellows, that the way will be open and there will be some place * * *. But please remember this, fellows: If in any way Mr. and Mrs. Doyle can ever be a help or friends to you, count on us." And they have.

One sunny day we said goodby to our little honeymoon cottage on the hill and drove in our buggy behind Sir John, an old racehorse and a good Doyle pet, to our new adventures in Long Beach. Since there were no hotels on the way and travel by buggy was slow, we camped out in a field by the roadside for the night, and as 1916 automobiles whizzed by at 30 miles per hour, we dreamed of the day when we, too, might be fortunate enough to own one.

My parents, who lived in a large house alone, made an apartment for us upstairs, where we began again the struggle for an education. From the surrounding 5 acres, my father brought us fruit, vegetables, eggs, and an occasional chicken, and we varied diet with fish which we caught from the pier on weekends.

By taking day and night courses and cramming the hours between 4 a.m. and 11 p.m. with study and classes, CLYDE managed to complete the 4-year course in 3 years, and 1 year before he graduated he passed the bar examination. On weekends, while he was in school, he worked for the Haskell & Keeler law firm, and later, after graduating, he worked with the same firm full time, finally become a partner. Eventually he headed his own law firm.

Forced by financial conditions to delay the beginning of a family, the Doyles were overjoyed to welcome the first "little Doily"; as CLYDE called each of his children, in April 1917, the year that he graduated from law school. Within 18 months, Clyde, Jr., an only son, arrived. And after an interval of 8 years, Dorothy, our 6½-month baby, premature because of a fall that I had, came, bringing with her many anxious moments for us as she fought to live.

Remembering his pledge to become a friend of man, CLYDE gave his services without cost to many churches, to the YWCA, and other social agencies, and to scores of needy individuals. He was asked by the PTA to conduct a study of recreational needs in the city of Long Beach, and in line with this request, became head of a committee representing every civic club in the city. After studying all the recreational programs in the cities of the country, the committee drew up a plan—the first of its kind—to coordinate the school and civic recreation programs of Long Beach and to provide support for the coordinate program from a small portion of the city budget and the school budget and personnel. CLYDE carried the responsibilities of chairman of the recreation commission until he ran for Congress nearly 15 years later.

During these years of civic work, CLYDE became convinced that the way to prevent juvenile delinquency was to keep youth so busy creatively in supervised city playgrounds that they would have neither the time nor the inclination to get into trouble. He became convinced, also, that no boy is bad and that only a boy who had been misled very early in life became a delinquent. Even after he went to Congress, his interest in boys led him to find time to think about their problems and to wonder how he could help them, and to do many thoughtful things for them individually and collectively.

Always happy in his civic services and law practice, CLYDE did not plan for himself a career in politics. But in 1944, a letter from Clyde, Jr., who was then fighting in the Aleutians, prompted him to respond to a third demand that he run for Congress. The letter urged him to "put on a political uniform" and to fight for the high principles of our democracy that our men in service were called upon to fight for. After winning a seat in the House, he placed great emphasis on the school programs in his district. He wrote hundreds of personal letters to schoolchildren, talked to many assemblies, and sent thousands of picture postcards from the Nation's Capital to children, believing, as he stated to those who remarked about the hours spent in such extra work, "You never know when some little thing you do may arouse in a young person a greater love of our country or more interest in it." To schools, clubs, and civic organizations, he presented flags which had flown over the Capitol because he believed that reverence for our country was increased by our devotion to the flag. In all of his travels for the "Watch Dog" Investigating Committee for the Armed Services, he looked up California men in service and listened to their problems.

Related above are some of the details of the background and of the thinking which made this quiet, happy man with boundless energy the man whom you all knew as Congressman. As he threw himself with the same devotion to duty into his congressional work, he quietly resolved to use any talent that God had given him in the service of his beloved country. His daily prayer as he walked up to Congress from his office was, "God, give me clear thinking so that I can make right decisions."

CLYDE'S choice of the Armed Services Committee was natural, for both the 18th and the 23d Districts, which he served at different times, had large interests in the Long Beach Naval Shipyard. He became a member of the Un-American Activities Committee, however, not because it was a natural choice for him, but rather because both Sam Rayburn and John McCormack requested him to, saying that he was not an extremist in any way and so would be a "balance wheel" for the committee.

During his early years in Congress, CLYDE fought a battle in this committee in an effort to do away with its practice of refusing to allow witnesses, while they were testifying, to have counsel. To him, this practice was undemocratic. While he believed firmly in individual rights, he also believed just as firmly in the need to protect our country from all subversive activities. As always, without fanfare he quietly acted on principle, no matter what the cost. His work in writing a code of procedures for this committee and for the outlawing of one-member hearings was a great contribution to fair hearings. When he was commended for his rules with the reservation that perhaps they did not go far enough, he would contend that he would rather make progress slowly but soundly than undertake too much and fail.

One of CLYDE'S great contributions probably brought him his greatest disappointment. This was his bill to give men with less-than-honorable discharges who had committed no great misdemeanor a chance to earn honorable discharges, though without the full benefits of that honor. Many, if not most, of these men were in their adventurous teens during the time of their service, and the charges against them did not involve crime but merely explosions of daring youth away from home trying to prove their manhood. Given a chance to rehabilitate themselves by earning honorable discharges without full benefits, they would be able to wipe out the stigma of less-than-honorable discharge which was a block to success and happiness for them and their families. With his many years of experience working on the problems of youth, CLYDE was able to understand these men and the gravity of their problem. After listening to thousands of pleas from them from most areas of the country, he became more and more convinced that they must be given a chance to earn honorable citizenship. And so he introduced his bill in the 86th Congress, certain that the cause was consistent with the principles of this democracy.

CLYDE fought hard for this bill, and it was for the purpose of continuing his fight that he decided to return to Congress the last time despite his plan to retire. Businessmen had told him that they did not interview for jobs men who had less-than-honorable discharges, but that they would interview any of them who wiped out the stigma on their records by earning honorable citizenship. The services had told him that, alerted to this injustice by his fight for a chance for these men, they had corrected the situation. One of the service branches still opposes the bill on the grounds that the situation has been corrected. But CLYDE'S concern was for the thousands of men already discharged from whom the stigma of less-than-honorable discharge has not been removed by these remedial measures.

In both the 86th and the 87th Congresses, CLYDE introduced bills which passed the House unanimously. Neither of these bills, however, was reported out of committee in the Senate, although he had felt that he had enough votes on the floor of the Senate to pass them. So anxious was he to have this legislation become law that he introduced it (H.R. 1062) on the 1st day of this 88th Congress. Unfortunately, the bill (H.R. 1062) had not come to the floor of the House for a vote when he died, and so he did not have the satisfaction of realizing success for his cause. For this legislation—and for the welfare of his country—CLYDE gave his life, for he had returned to Congress this last session to complete what he had started. Giving his services joyfully, he never spared himself when he felt the call of duty.

After his love for God, CLYDE'S first love was for his family, and they were always on his mind, although he was a very busy man. When he was away from home, his notes were brief: "Hello, Treasure. I miss you. I wish you could be here. I'll be home as soon as possible. U.R.A. Joy. Your loving CLYDE."

He knew and admired the Members of Congress and considered it a great honor to serve his country as a Congressman. Believing that most of us can become well informed only along a few lines, he studied the men on the committees on which he served paying particular attention, as most of you, his colleagues, do, to those who were the best informed and the most judicial and who had the most integrity. He had confidence in the ability of these men and in their desire to promote sound legislation. After hearing their arguments, he could vote without fear, believing that he was serving the welfare of his country.

I have given you this personal and intimate story of my husband because he still lives on within me as I am sure that he still lives on in many of you, his colleagues, and also because I feel that he is disturbed in his last sleep by a restlessness born of his strong desire to see consummated the legislation to which he dedicated the last years of his life. Only you who have paid tribute to his memory can still enact into law his bill (H.R. 1062). Many of CLYDE'S friends have told me that they would like to see his bill go through in his name. By seeing that it does, you would temper CLYDE'S devotion to his country with love and charity for your unfortunate fellowmen who have been stigmatized by our legislative process. Such an action on your part would be, indeed, a living monument to CLYDE'S integrity, his dedication, and his humility. Such a tribute would be inscribed not on marble, but in our hearts and minds.

"Rest in peace, CLYDE DOYLE. Your mission has been accomplished, for you have alerted your colleagues to this great need."

I have not tried to give a complete record of CLYDE'S work in Congress, for I believe that newspaper reports and his biography cover most of that. It is rather my desire to emphasize his last struggle to give these fellow Americans whose indiscretions during their youth have been so costly for them an opportunity to be worthy citizens and heads of good, loyal families of our proud democracy.

Lovingly,

LYDIA DOYLE.

CLYDE GILMAN DOYLE

My Father, Congressman Clyde Doyle

March 13, 1963, is a day that I shall never forget. Just before midnight the telephone rang in my California home. For some time a sense of foreboding had been hanging over me, a feeling both disturbing and puzzling. Now as I heard my mother's hesitant, choking voice say, "Dad is dead," premonition became reality which gripped me, stunned and trembling. Catching the first plane for Washington, within a few hours I was on my way to mother. On this transcontinental flight I was aware of a particular phenomenon that often occurs in times of sudden death of a loved one now occurring for the third time for me: the world, my world, had come to an end; the light, my guiding light, had gone out.

Through the dimness that obscured everything around me for a time, I slowly became aware of the rustle of newspapers and the voices of other passengers saying: "Not Clyde Doyle. I knew him well. Oh, no. I can't believe it." "He was my Congressman. What will we do now?" "Such a great loss to us all and to the Nation." "Wasn't he on a TV newscast Tuesday night? He looked so well."

The full import of what had happened only hours ago lay heavily on me now as I looked down the aisle at the many newspaper headlines in huge, bold type declaring, "Congressman Clyde Doyle Died." Stopping the stewardess as she passed my seat, I asked her if she would pick up one of the papers for me when they were laid aside, explaining that Congressman Doyle was my father. Her mouth dropped open in amazement, and she said, "I, too, was very fond of your Dad. He happened to be on one of my flights to Washington. Your parents and I became good friends."

This young stewardess was most thoughtful and considerate, even giving me her seat at the back of the plane where I could rest better.

After reaching Dulles Airport, still in the daze that was to last for months, I sat down on a bench with the newspaper across my knees, waiting for mother. While I was trying to comprehend what the shock had probably done to her, a man and his wife stopped to glance at the headlines across my knees. With shock written all over their faces, they exclaimed, "Clyde Doyle. No, not Clyde. He was in the store only yesterday to buy seed for his birds. As usual we had such a wonderful visit."

I looked up to tell them that it was true and that I was his daughter. Visibly shaken, they introduced themselves as the owners of the hardware store in Cherrydale, Va. With warmth and sincerity they asked me to give their love to my mother and offered to help in any way that they could.

These first encounters, so unexpected, on the plane and at the airport with people who loved Dad—people who were strangers to me—made me more aware than ever that he was a part of countless lives.

Now, almost 6 months later, sitting in Daddy's favorite lounge chair in his Arlington home, I am finding my sadness tempered by a measure of contentment as I look out into his beautiful "sunshine and shadow forest" and patio garden, watching perhaps for the last time the birds and the squirrels that he loved so dearly and fed every day, fly in for their favorite sunflower seeds.

Reliving in memory the wonderful way of life that he taught us and that he so abundantly lived, I feel a need to put fragments of it into words for my two sons so that they will better understand what he tried to teach them, and also for all others who loved him.

In doing this, I am assisted by a circumstance for which I am very grateful: as our world began to turn on its axis again, we sensed that our guiding light had not been extinguished. The necessity for making numerous quick decisions, the gradual unfolding of our plans for the future, the breaking up of our two small homes and the replacing of them with a larger home so that we could all be together—in these situations and in scores of others that are much more perplexing and complex, we somehow have felt Daddy's smile and nod of approval.

As I look back over more than 30 years of my "life with father," I am first aware of the near perfection of the marriage of my parents. Then I am moved by the incredible amount of love and God-directed activity with which he crammed to overflow his days from the beginning to the last fateful day. I used to call him "our mad Russian" (Rush'en). Of course, he was anything but mad. He was a man in a hurry to do all that he could in his humble, determined way to make a bit smoother the path of life for those who had become stranded along the way.

The wonderment and the excitement of Christmas as Daddy made us feel it when I was a very small child will always be with me. Seeing Santa Claus arrive with his bulging bag, helping him pass out the presents, and being kidded by him was a thrill. And seeing him kiss our mother was an enchanting experience for us all. Nobody could ever tell me that there was no Santa, for I was his helper. Behind those flowing white whiskers, there was real flesh and blood in that red suit. Dad's absence from the festivity was always explained by a telephone call summoning him to a duty or saying that he had been detained at the office, but would be home as soon as possible and that if he did not get to see Santa, we should give him Dad's love. Touched by the thoughtfulness of my sister, Lydia Louise, who insisted upon leaving food for the reindeer and a present for Santa, Dad would smile tenderly at her, his blue eyes twinkling with delight. So great was our enchantment that it outlasted Clyde, Jr.'s discovery that Santa was wearing Daddy's shoes.

Only the make-believe was over now. For mother explained that Santa was real because he was the Christmas spirit of loving and giving. Now there was even more fun as I helped Dad put on his pillow, his suit, and his whiskers and added a final touch of rouge to his cheeks and nose. In all Dad's years as Santa he had never been chased around the outside of the house by a very determined boy wanting to find out what happened to Santa after he left our house until his oldest grandson, Danny, chased him one year. It was a very hilarious, breathtaking scene until Santa finally made his escape.

Unable to confine his Santa Claus activities to the family circle because of his delight in the joy of others, Daddy, with me as his helper, played Santa for many children outside our home. Courageous little ones at the Christmas parties at the Tichenor Clinic for Crippled Children and the YWCA yearly Christmas festivities for underprivileged children received a large share of Daddy's Christmas spirit and in return gave him delight in their happy faces. Probably at that time the first Santa to arrive anywhere by air, he stepped from Earl Dougherty's plane onto the beach one Christmas Day into a crowd of excited children assembled there under the auspices of the Middough Bros. Clothing Store, of Long Beach.

Hoping to instill in us his love of the beauty and the greatness of our country, Dad spent many of his summer vacations conducting family tours in our trailer of the national parks and places of historical interest all over the country. Sitting around the campfire at night, we learned much about the secrets and the mysteries of nature and the life of the wild animals of the forest. Their imaginations quickened by these tales, Dad and Mother made up stories of their own about the animals of the "Sunshine and Shadow Forest" to entertain their youngest, very restless daughter of 7 while crossing the country to the 1933 Chicago World's Fair after a park vacation. (Mother has promised to write down these stories for my grandchildren.)

Sharing with us his love of the out-of-doors, Dad took us for many weekends, summer and winter, to our small cabin in the mountains, where we fished, hiked, swam, rode horseback and even "packed in" on mule or horseback to the streams and the lakes of the rugged High Sierras. Often after Congress had recessed, accompanied by a few of his closest fishing friends, he would take the entire family out on the ocean near Long Beach for a day of fishing. On those rare and special occasions when he had time for recreation while attending to his congressional duties in Washington, he would lead us on fishing expeditions along the lovely streams of Virginia and Maryland, pointing out what a great source of pleasure, relaxation, and inspiration such beauties of nature are.

Dad's love of nature became a channel for passing along his principles of good Christian citizenship and effective living to the third generation, his grandsons, my Danny and Clyde. During their brief periods in Washington, Danny's year as a page boy in the House of Representatives and Clyde's summer spent recuperating from a long illness, Dad took them with him on his tramps along the forest streams of Virginia, passing along to them with a touch of humor his philosophy of life.

The last fishing trip that Dad took was to Paradise Valley, 10,000 feet up in the Sierras, two summers ago. Danny, Clyde, their other grandfather, their 12-year-old cousin and Dad packed in on horseback 17 miles up a narrow, steep, winding, and rugged mountainside to this peaceful valley of streams for a week of fishing. Around the campfire Dad described the trips like this one that he had taken with his own son and his pals years before.

What a sight it must have been to see them wearily making their way back down those seemingly never-ending 17 miles on horseback—the two triumphant, saddlesore grandfathers past 70 and their three scarcely teenage grandsons. At the age of 73, Dad finally cried "Uncle" to such trips as this one, though he vowed that this was one to remember always, if not to be repeated.

Dad's great love for all living things, large and small, found expression in his desire to have pets of all sizes for his children, and so we grew up surrounded by creatures of many kinds that became our daily companions—dogs, cats, ducks, chickens, pigeons, rabbits, a huge aviary, and Goldie, our goat. This love extended to all things that grow, as though it was a form of love of life, itself—and so working close to nature in the garden was a source of relaxation all his life. During the war years, he would come home from his work in the block victory garden refreshed and happy, his arms full of garden-fresh red, green, and yellow vegetables and fruits with a flavor no market can provide.

My memories go back to the early days of his law practice and to the terrible depression, when many people in need of legal help had suffered tragic reverses of fortune. Dad could not send away anybody who could not pay. To him a person's worth could not be judged by the amount of money he had. Uppermost in his mind was one thought: "How can I help this man (or woman)?" This problem he finally settled by deciding to take the cases of needy clients on a contingency basis providing a small fee for him if he won and nothing if he lost, which he rarely did.

Many times out of gratitude for his kind consideration, clients presented him with gifts of their trade. One mouth-watering memory is of a client who was a lobster fisherman. After Dad won a difficult case for him, this grateful man provided us with more lobsters for the season than we could eat. More rewarding to Dad, perhaps, than these material expressions of thanks were words of gratitude from those clients, and there were many such who declared that if it hadn't been for Dad, they wouldn't have much today. It was his sympathetic understanding, his encouragement and faith in them, their knowledge that he was their friend as well as his legal advice, they said, that had made it easier for them to rise above their adversities.

Since Dad has gone on his greatest adventure, many persons whom I have met, both in California and in Washington, have expressed to me their warmth of feeling for him. Friends, some of whom I knew and others of whom I did not know, have stopped me on the streets of Long Beach to speak to me about the loss of their treasured friend, unashamed of the tears streaming down their faces. On my trip to Washington to help Mother sell their little forest home, I have had very similar experiences in Cherrydale, Va., where people have stopped me to say that Dad was their friend and that he is greatly missed. All this and the volumes of letters of condolence, and the warm, moving testimonials of his fellow Congressmen have led me humbly to know that everywhere my father went he found a new friend—man, woman, or child—who eventually loved him as I do.

An unpretentious man, Dad loved the simple pleasures and the peaceful tranquility of country life. The temptation to change to a more sophisticated pattern of living after we moved into our lovely colonial home at the top of the golden, rolling countryside of Alimotoe Heights in Long Beach did not come to him (nor to Mother). To them our new home was a place for children to grow as they roamed and explored the expansive open area.

The many young people who came to our home always found an encouraging, helpful friend in Dad, who not only gave them assistance with their problems but joined them in their fun. He led "not so much by precept, but by example." From all over the world we hear from young men and women—and some no longer very young—who say that in our home they learned values that gave greater meaning to life for them. What they do not realize is that they enriched our lives so very much, also.

Many boys worked their way through junior college in our home. Each became, in turn, one of the family, another interesting brother for us and a son for Dad to help with advice and understanding. One of these boys decided to become a lawyer like Dad while he was living with us. Years later when I was visiting in Washington, Mother and I went to the Supreme Court to hear Dad sponsor him for practice before the Court. What a thrill it was for the three Doyles to be present during our friend's hour of achievement.

Many years ago, long before I was even thought of, Dad was first asked to run for Congress. He decided not to give up the practice of law for which he had studied so long and so hard for politics, which he did not consider to be an activity for which he was so well suited. And then there was his community work centered around his youth activities, which he loved and felt he could not forsake. So he stayed with the two things that he liked more than he thought he would like politics—the law and youth work. But another call to run for Congress came to him in 1941 before we entered the war. Again, for the same reason he declined the proffered honor.

The year 1943 was the year of decision for Dad. We were deeply involved in the war; most men were thinking in terms of service to their country rather than in terms of personal desires regarding the work they would do. And so when Dad, in that year, was asked for the third time to run for Congress, he gave the request long thought, and as he pondered, the fateful strings began to tug. Delaying his final decision was a question in his mind: "Am I the right man for this job?"

With the responsibility of making a decision so important to so many people weighing heavily on his mind, after deliberation and prayerful consideration, Dad wrote to Clyde, Jr., who was then a First Lieutenant in the Air Force fighting in the Aleutian Islands, asking his advice. Clyde's letter in answer read as follows:

"Dad, war is a hellish business, but we boys have been taught all our lives to preserve our country for life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness, love of God, however we want to worship him.

"I don't like all this killing. It's so very wrong. God loves all his creations, and it won't solve anything this way. But if this is the only way now for me, I'll certainly do whatever my country requires of me.

"Somehow I can't really hate these men as individuals. It is totally against my nature. I only hate the evil forces that bring this slaughter of mankind about. After all, they are fighting for what they believe in, however wrong, as we are fighting for what we believe.

"This way of settling the world's problems must come to an end, never to be repeated.

"Dad, you can't put on a uniform, but you can go to Congress and fight for a better world there by helping us make better laws so boys like me won't have to shed their blood again.

"It is up to the dedicated men of deep moral and spiritual convictions, the world over, to bring about this longed-for peace and understanding on earth, men who will fight with all that is in them for the principles and ideals our country was founded on.

"So, go to it, Dad. I am with you all the way."

This letter from his own son was enough to tip the scales of Dad's fate. He ran and was victorious.

About 3 weeks after Dad had been sworn into office, we received the first great shock of our lives: the heart-rending news that our beloved Clyde, Jr., was dead, the victim of a plane crash. Burdened with grief and deeply shocked, but with chin up and a courageous smile, Dad now vowed to fight doubly hard to fulfill Clyde's faith in him and to help all the boys and their beloved country for which they were giving their lives.

In the gradual unfurling of his life, so much like the slow unfurling in the gentle breeze of the Stars and Stripes for which he so valiantly fought, is revealed a man who held steadfast to his early dedication to be a friend to man and to find ways, when he was on the ladder to success, to help young men in all walks of life. Never forgetting this pledge, he devoted much of his time and energy to the complex problems of our boys in service.

When Dad was in California between sessions of the last term of Congress, he told me that he would retire after this session. And then later he announced that he would run "just one more time" with a particular goal in mind: to do all that he could to put across his bill that would free thousands of young men and their families from the stigma of a less-than-honorable discharge by giving them the opportunity to earn honorable citizenship. He had introduced this bill in the 86th Congress and again in the 87th Congress. It had passed the House unanimously both times, but had been held up in the Senate committee. Believing that he now had lined up enough support in the Senate to get the bill out of committee, Dad again introduced it on the 1st day of the 88th Congress, January 9, 1963.

The prospect for success looked promising. But the dream for which he had worked so hard and so long was never to be realized during his lifetime, for his time was so much shorter than he thought.

My intention was to write about my father, but as I do so, I find that it is impossible to think of either of my parents without the other, for they were, and still are, so completely united as one in all ways. So different in personality, yet they were so companionable, for they perfectly complemented each other. Together, before the start of each day, they prayed for God's guidance, "Give us the strength and the wisdom to make wise decisions and to act according to Thy will." In times of doubt about the wisdom of a choice to be made or of grief and disappointment, they found comfort together in declaring, "Thy will be done."

Always supported by his belief in the power of prayer and Christian living, Dad looked forward to the meetings of the Thursday morning House breakfast group, sponsored by the International Christian Leadership. Asked to be president of this group some years ago, he had declined the honor because he felt that his extremely heavy workload at that time would stand in the way of his giving the breakfast group the time and attention that it should be given by its leader. He had finally consented, however, to take over the responsibility and was to become president of the group at Eastertime this year.

While he was the secretary of this group in 1949, Dad made some remarks on the House floor that were quoted in the Christian Leadership News as follows: "More and more do I feel that only as we in Congress remain humble and practive the keeping of an attitude of supplication for help in clear thinking will we do our best work for the American people. As prayer is an entreaty and an earnest request, I am sure that every Member of this great deliberative body recognizes the need of practicing the habit of prayer as part of clearing mental attitudes and removing petty or puny thinking from the field of performance of congressional duties. Humility begets power, and nothing gives ordinary man so much humility as consciously to seek divine guidance."

I have already mentioned the remarkable companionship of my parents, their oneness of thought and spirit. Now I want to say something about their devotion to the welfare of each other. Mother came first in Dad's thoughts, and we children were next. Since he seemed never to have a thought for himself, mother kept constant watch over him to see that his needs were in no way neglected. After the tragic death of my sister Lydia Louise, 3 years ago, and the near passing of mother a short time later, Dad's great delight was in doing unexpected, thoughtful little things around the house for her. His sense of humor helped to lighten the burden of grief. When Mother would thank him for some thoughtful attention he had paid to her comfort, he would say, with his sparkling blue eyes twinkling, "Martha [as he jokingly called himself] has been here."

To Dad a task, no matter how humble, should be done joyously, and nothing that must be done was too menial for any man to do, no matter what his station in life happened to be. Nobody, he thought, should lose the common touch. Thrifty, himself, in the use of material goods, he believed that one should not waste money, things—or time. It was without doubt his wise and fruitful use of time and money together with his Christian faith that largely made possible his accomplishments.

After going to Congress, Dad's time out for pleasure was very spare. Without Mother's careful watch to see that he did not use all the 24 hours of the day in work or service, he would have taken no time for pleasurable relaxation. He always said, however, that his work was his pleasure and that he loved every minute of it. Unlike most men, he did not leave his work in his office at the end of the regular working hours. Instead, he brought it home, where he would sit in his lounge chair before a crackling fire, studying or writing to his constituents.

Dad and Mother had dreams of retiring one day, of traveling by trailer all over the country, of editing his diary of daily congressional activities, and of writing things they wanted to publish. Next year they were to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary by going around the world on a freighter. This was to be the "glorious honeymoon trip" that he had promised Mother over 50 years ago when he had asked her to marry him. So many of the dreams that he had never had either the time or the money for were at last to become realities. Some of these dreams had first come to him in the years of his early youth when he had to earn a living for his aged parents and get an education at the same time. The hardships were all over now, and he could relax and live these dreams with his "Treasure," his "Joy Forever," his one and only loving wife.

If God's alloted time for Dad had come, as apparently it had, one thing is certain: he had not "rusted away"; he had "just plumb worn out." Just going to sleep and quietly slipping away while he was still in active service would have been his choice of the way to go.

We who miss him every minute are led by our faith to believe that his new adventure is for him a new awakening, offering him a new horizon and a new frontier with opportunity for further growth. And so we release him, knowing that love is eternal and still envelops and guides us. We face the future with smiles and a determination to be worthy of his great love.

He dreamed his dreams for others, and he passionately desired to see them fulfilled, and his great devotion to his country and to his effort to do what he could in this perilous time to preserve freedom and to help our boys who would die for freedom, I believe, would have kept him in his seat next to the Democratic table as long as God and his "great 23d" District willed.

Others who, like us, have lost a dear and precious one of whom memories will never die may understand my tribute to my Dad.

His loving twinkling Irish blue eyes I may not see. His cheery "hi hi" is gone forever from our ears. His understanding, "Chin up with a smile," and life's joy ebbed out to sea, no longer the physical ears do hear.

But lo. What have we here? My courage also ebbing out to sea, the tears did fall, I fear.

Was that his understanding "Chin up with a smile" in my inner ear as I bid him my last final fare-thee-well?

As I slowly raise my chin and try to smile, do I feel, more than see, his laughing, twinkling Irish-blue eyes embracing me with a loving smile?

Chin up, with a quivering smile and one tiny tear in my eye, I hear his cheery "Hi hi. I'm always near. No need to weep and mourn."

And, lo, with a courageous smile a new and closer relationship is born.

Yes, this wonderful, dear, courageous, dedicated Christian father and statesman will forever be with us in spirit, cheering us on with his "hi hi" and "Chin up with a smile" and his very special greeting for mother, "You are a joy forever."

Recorded in the annals of history he may never be.

Recorded in the hearts of all who loved him, he will always be.

In loving memory, by his daughter,

DOROTHY DOYLE STANTON.

Remarks by Representative Ryan

Of New York

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this tribute to our late colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, who was one of the most attentive and conscientious Members of the House. During my service here I came to know CLYDE DOYLE as the kind and considerate individual who has been described so accurately today.

His interests were broad and his understanding deep. Although we disagreed on certain issues, he understood that our disagreement was a matter of principle and not personal. He was often helpful to me in explaining the procedures of the House as he occupied his accustomed place and recorded in detail the course of debate. CLYDE DOYLE's daily presence on the floor will be missed by all of us. Mr. Speaker, I extend to Mrs. Doyle and her family my deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Zablocki

Of Wisconsin

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in expressing my deep sorrow at the passing last night of the late Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

A man who served his district, his State, and his country for many years with dedication and devotion, Congressman DOYLE was to us who served with him, above all, a gentleman, with all the virtues that the term implies. As he kept the quiet tenor of his ways, he was unfailing in his courtesy and a model of gentility.

Congressman DOYLE distinguished himself both as second ranking member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and as a member of the Armed Services Committee. His presence on those committees and in this legislative body will be sorely missed.

My wife joins me in expressing deep sympathy to his widow and family. May they derive some small consolation from the knowledge that their loss is shared by his many friends.

Remarks by Representative Bennett

Of Florida

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, among the thousands of public officials whom I have known in my lifetime I have never known one of warmer heart than our beloved deceased colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. It was my privilege to sit next to him on the House Armed Services Committee for many years, and it was my privilege to meet with him in a prayer group every Thursday morning ever since we came to Congress together in the 81st Congress, 1949. My wife and his wife were closely associated together in the 81st Club and are dear friends. Words are inadequate to express feelings as close and heartfelt as we all feel for CLYDE DOYLE. His statesmanship and leadership in his work in the House Armed Services Committee and in the Un-American Activities Committee will be a lasting memorial to him.

Mr. Speaker, only yesterday CLYDE DOYLE found something nice to say to me about something that I was trying to do. This was characteristic of what he always tried to do—find the good in everybody and try to increase it. All of us have lost a dear friend, and the country has lost a great statesman. I am sure I speak for every Member of Congress when I express our deepest sympathy to his beloved widow and family.

Remarks by Representative Brown

Of California

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, it was with great sadness that I listened to the news of the passing this morning of our colleague and my neighbor from the 23d Congressional District of California.

Throughout his 14 years as a Member of the House of Representatives, CLYDE DOYLE has unswervingly fought for the kind of America he knew was best for us.

Not only in his own district, but throughout the Los Angeles area—and, in fact, the State of California—Congressman DOYLE has stood out as portraying a man who has always been a credit to the Halls of Congress and to his family. Not once has the slightest impropriety marred his record, although his record of fighting communism made him many enemies who were constantly searching for something with which they might besmirch his fine name.

CLYDE DOYLE's unceasing efforts on the Committee on Un-American Activities are well known. During my 10-year acquaintanceship with him, I have always felt that we were both striving for the same end—a world of freemen, free of totalitarian or Communist dictatorship—although our paths appeared to be at cross purposes on some occasions.

I do not believe there are any among us who will be able to better CLYDE DOYLE's record of dedication, sincerity, and loyalty to the principles of democracy and the welfare of the United States.

Remarks by Representative Reuss

Of Wisconsin

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my deep sorrow over the death of our esteemed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE. I pay tribute to him as a dedicated Congressman, a patriotic American, and a fine man.

CLYDE DOYLE was the very soul of kindness to me from the first day I came to this House, and I took pleasure in having him as a dear friend. He was a man who gained preeminence not by chance and circumstance but by striving and great effort. He earned his own way through high school and college and went on to carve out a distinguished career as an attorney and in public service before winning election to Congress in 1944. As a Member of Congress, he constantly showed forth his heartfelt concern for the safety and security of our Nation and gave his great talents unstintingly to preserve the United States.

I am sure many Members remember with appreciation, as I do, the habit he had of being present on the floor at all times and taking careful, analytical notes on the proceedings. There have been many occasions when his willingness to share his notes has been helpful to me and other Members.

We shall miss CLYDE DOYLE. I want to express my deepest sympathy to his family.

Remarks by Representative Walter

Of Pennsylvania

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, all of us here in the House of Representatives are saddened by the sudden death of CLYDE DOYLE. The country, the Congress, and the people of his district particularly, have suffered a deep loss. In the 31 years I have served in the Congress I have known few men who were as kind and gentle, as tolerant and understanding, so full of good will to all men as was CLYDE DOYLE. Yet, there was an intelligent limit to his good will and tolerance. It was for this reason, his deep sense of patriotism, and his abhorrence of what was evil and corrupt, that he served for 12 years with such distinction on the Committee on Un-American Activities.

CLYDE DOYLE was proud of his native California, and took an active part in charity work, particularly as it pertained to the care and treatment of children.

As an attorney, CLYDE DOYLE was a stickler for perfection. Following graduation from the College of Law of the University of Southern California at Los Angeles in 1917, he was admitted to the bar at Long Beach, Calif.

Aside from serving on the Committee on Un-American Activities here in Congress, CLYDE DOYLE served with distinction with the House Armed Services Committee. Everyone knows in this great body his concern for the serviceman, and that he be properly protected in times of conflict.

The effects of war hit CLYDE DOYLE hard during the last World War as he lost a son, 1st Lt. Clyde Doyle, Jr., who was a member of the Air Force.

Our beloved colleague served on many other special committees of this great body, and each time that he was called on, he served with deep devotion and understanding.

CLYDE GILMAN DOYLE

Today I extend to his dear wife and other members of his family my deepest sympathy. A good friend and a great legislator has left this Chamber, and we all will miss him deeply.

Remarks by Representative Lipscomb

Of California

Mr. LIPSCOMB. Mr. Speaker, the State of California, the Congress, and the Nation have lost an outstanding citizen when our esteemed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, died suddenly last night.

A Member of the Congress for 18 years, CLYDE was foremost a patriot and a firm believer in the principles on which this great country of ours was founded. He placed a high value on the liberties granted the American people by the Founding Fathers.

CLYDE served as second ranking majority member of the House Un-American Activities Committee and was a rugged opponent of communism. He was an active member of the committee, for he recognized communism as a real threat to his homeland. Similarly, he served with distinction on the House Armed Services Committee. His strength of character and ability will be deeply missed in the House of Representatives.

Not only was CLYDE DOYLE a colleague, but he was a good friend. As members of the California delegation, we shared the pride of those who called themselves Californians. CLYDE was born in California, educated in California, married to a California girl, and has devoted his life to serving his State.

His endeavors in the public interest were numerous. To mention a few: He was first president of Boy Scout Council of Boy Scouts of America in Long Beach, Calif.; several years chairman of tuberculosis stamp sales; member board of directors of California Conference of Social Work; and honorary member of National Recreation Association. The people of California paid due recognition to this outstanding citizen by reelecting him to the 87th Congress by the largest majority he had ever received—over 93,000.

A devoted husband, CLYDE was also a devoted father and grandfather. To his wife, his daughter, and his entire family, I extend my heartfelt and deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Roush

Of Indiana

Mr. ROUSH. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was my friend. What more can one man say about another man? He saw the good in all men. He exemplified in every respect a spirit of genuine friendliness. It did not take a new Member long to become acquainted with the quiet and attentive gentleman who sat in a certain seat near the front on the Democratic side every day.

He spoke sincerely and in a brotherly manner to his colleagues. You did not sit beside him long until you were aware that he was a man of God, that he was a patriot, and that he loved his State and his people with a passion. His witness was unmistakably that of a devout, patriotic, and conscientious man who was very mindful of his high calling and grave responsibilities.

We shall all miss CLYDE. I shall especially miss him. I join with my colleagues in expressing sincere and heartfelt condolences to his family and a prayerful hope that God might sustain them in this hour of sorrow.

Remarks by Representative Rooney

Of New York

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I was really stunned this morning when I found the flags here at the Capitol flying at half-mast and then learned of the sudden and unexpected passing of my good friend and colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, of California. I was shocked because it was only last night that CLYDE and I attended the National American Legion dinner at the Sheraton Park Hotel, and he appeared to be in excellent health.

I came to know CLYDE DOYLE well during his 17 years as a Member of this body, and considered it a privilege to call him my friend. He was a capable legislator and was held in the highest esteem and respect by all of his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

At the time of his passing, CLYDE was the ranking member of the House Un-American Activities Committee. He worked hard to preserve this committee and led the fight against its abolition and attempted denial of funds. He was also a member of the Armed Services Committee and always took an active interest in veterans' affairs.

Congressman DOYLE served his constituency, the State of California, and the Nation with honor and distinction, and will be greatly missed by all.

To his dear wife and daughter, I extend my heartfelt sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Leggett

Of California

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I learned of the passing of veteran legislator, adviser, and colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of my home State of California. CLYDE has not only rendered distinguished service to the California delegation, but also to the people of Los Angeles County, the State of California, and the Nation. The 23d District of California can be proud of the contributions their Representative in Congress has made toward a better Government and a better America.

During 20 years of Federal service, Congressman DOYLE has risen to the first-ranking position of his party on the House Un-American Activities Committee, and likewise he has achieved a high position of respect on the Armed Services Committee.

As a new Member of the Congress, I found CLYDE was interested in the new Member's problems. He was a sage adviser and assisted measurably in the orientation of many of the new Members from our State. The new Members of the California delegation have lost a valued friend.

Congressman DOYLE lived a full life, competing until his last day on the floor of the House of Representatives. The Nation will not soon fill the void herein created.

Remarks by Representative Winstead

Of Mississippi

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and deeply distressed by the sudden death of our able colleague from California, CLYDE DOYLE. The fine tributes that have been paid him here today are well-deserved and true. It has been my privilege to serve with him on the House Armed Services Committee for many years, and he was a valued member of the Subcommittee on Real Estate and Construction of which I am chairman.

I have never known a more sincere Christian gentleman than CLYDE DOYLE, and neither have I ever known a more dedicated and loyal citizen. His contributions as a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee are well known to us all and will, I am confident, have a lasting effect on the security of the country which he loved so well.

I join with the other Members of the House in extending deepest sympathy to his wife and his fine family in their great loss—a loss that is shared by all of us here in the Congress.

Remarks by Representative Price

Of Illinois

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE and I began our service in this House on the same day and as a consequence of this and later close association in committee assignments I came to know him very well. Anyone who had the opportunity to work with him, quickly saw his fine character and dedication.

I have never known any Member of this great body more serious about his work than CLYDE DOYLE. I think my colleagues will agree with me that he spent every moment of his busy life working in behalf of others. The kind of legislation he supported most vigorously was that which he felt improved the welfare of his countrymen and gave greater guarantee of the security of his country.

A native Californian, he gave unselfishly of his talents to every program to better the community and State. He was most active in so many such projects it would require pages in this Record to set them down.

He was a distinguished lawyer whose ability was recognized to the extent he was frequently called on to serve in responsible positions where legal training was required. In committee work here in Congress his great experience in this field was apparent in his penetrating examination of the many and varied problems that commanded his interest.

CLYDE DOYLE was highly respected by all who knew him and I think the tribute paid to him this afternoon clearly shows the love of his colleagues for his gentleness, his religious fervor, and his strength of character.

Remarks by Representative Kastenmeier

Of Wisconsin

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, like so many of my colleagues who are rising to pay tribute here today to the memory of Congressman CLYDE DOYLE, I too was deeply saddened by the news of the passing from our midst of this elder statesman and longtime Representative of the 24th District of California, both as a public servant and an American patriot in the finest tradition.

It has been my privilege to serve with Congressman DOYLE only since 1959 when I came to Congress, and his quiet geniality and kindliness came through with genuineness and clarity.

Congressman DOYLE had a breadth of human understanding that transcended his wide circle of friends and even the bounds of his constituency. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, he became the defender and protector of all GI's and sought with relentless diligence to secure the enactment of legislation which would permit the correction of military records where servicemen who had received less-than-honorable discharges, had proved themselves more than worthy of honorable civilian status.

I am confident that I speak for all who knew him when I say that he will be remembered with warmth and affection, and I know, too, that the absence of his kindly presence in this Chamber will be felt with equal keenness by his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Remarks by Representative Bray

Of Indiana

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, all of us were shocked when we received word this morning that our colleague CLYDE DOYLE had died during the night.

I have known CLYDE DOYLE since I first came to Congress more than 12 years ago. I have had the pleasure of serving with him on the Armed Services Committee for more than 10 years. I have also had the pleasant and interesting experience of serving on subcommittees where CLYDE was the chairman.

It was CLYDE who, a few years ago, made the long and difficult fight to bring some fairness and relief to those unfortunate servicemen who had received military discharges that, while not dishonorable, did cast reflection on future years. These discharges were given without a formal court-martial, and from a study of these cases it is evident that grave injustice had been done many of our ex-servicemen. CLYDE fought for these unfortunate GI's in a most effective manner. He did not accomplish all that he set out to do because he could not get the legislation acted upon by the other body; yet because of the tireless work and dedication which CLYDE demonstrated, great good has been accomplished not only for the GI's of today, but for years to come.

Our colleague was one of the kindest and most considerate men I have ever known. While CLYDE was a fearless and vigorous warrior for those principles for which he believed, I have never known him to say an unkind word to or about anyone.

He will be greatly missed and long remembered.

Remarks by Representative Van Deerlin

Of California

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE's standard for a U.S. Congressman was expressed in a true story he related to me some 10 years ago.

When Mr. DOYLE first sought the Democratic nomination in his southern California district, he was one of several candidates interviewed by a committee representing organized labor. As its final question to each man, the committee asked, "On being elected, would you like to become known as labor's spokesman on Capitol Hill?"

CLYDE DOYLE replied in the negative. He told the committee it was his conception of a Congressman's job to represent all elements of his district. He thus would not want to be a "spokesman" for labor, for business, for veterans, for teachers or for any other special interest.

"I went home that night heavy at heart," Mr. DOYLE recalled. "I felt certain I would now be denied an endorsement that could be vital to my nomination."

It was a matter of some surprise, then, when the labor delegation returned early next day. Its members informed Mr. DOYLE he was being endorsed for Congress. One of them added: "You were the only candidate we talked with who answered the key question correctly."

For 15 years, the House has been well served by the honesty and devotion of our fellow Californian, CLYDE DOYLE. I join scores of colleagues in mourning his loss.

Remarks by Representative Johnson

Of California

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the memory of a good friend and neighbor who served California for many years in the House of Representatives. We all were shocked and saddened by the sudden passing of Congressman CLYDE DOYLE.

Our friend was a most dedicated and conscientious Representative and certainly was among the hardest working Members of this House. When I first came to Congress 4 years ago, one of my first impressions was of CLYDE DOYLE arriving at his office to study his mail and begin the day's work before many of us sat down to breakfast. For 4 years, I was privileged to be a neighbor of CLYDE DOYLE in the Longworth House Office Building, his office being next to mine.

The people of California and the Nation have lost a faithful public servant. CLYDE DOYLE was active in his community all his life. His interest and leadership in community affairs dates back to high school days in Los Angeles when he was a champion debater, newspaper manager, president of the study body, and still found time to be the high school baseball team's star pitcher.

Anyone who has earned his way through college and earned a law degree knows how difficult this can be, but CLYDE DOYLE was never afraid of work. He tried every job from delivering newspapers to being a janitor. He is an outstanding example of a man who has pulled himself up by the bootstraps and made a tremendous success of his life.

CLYDE DOYLE always gave of himself to his community, and I think that the following summary of his community activities before his election to Congress indicate the great contributions he made:

CLYDE GILMAN DOYLE

In 1936 received unanimous award of meritorious citizenship plaque by vote of all the service clubs of Long Beach, Calif., as the most valuable and useful adult citizen in Long Beach; first member of Long Beach Kiwanis Club and organizing president; first president of Boy Scouts of America Council in Long Beach; several years president of Long Beach tuberculosis stamp sales; member of the board of trustees and legal counsel, Adelaide Tichenor Hospital-School and Clinic for Crippled Children; boys secretary, member of board of directors, Long Beach YMCA; member, board of trustees, California Junior Republic, Chino; president, Long Beach Recreation Commission, for 15 years without pay; first president, Long Beach Coordinating Council, 1934; first president, Long Beach Philharmonic Orchestra Association; honorary member of National Recreation Association; honorary member, California Conference of Social Work; honorary member, Long Beach 20–30 Club; president, Long Beach Trojan Club, U.S.C.; president, Abraham Lincoln Club, Long Beach, for several years; member of Abraham Lincoln Group, Washington, D.C.; Los Angeles juvenile probation officer; examiner of applications for positions of juvenile court probation officer, Los Angeles County, under Hon. Curtis D. Wilbur, distinguished judge, juvenile court, later Secretary of Navy under President Hoover; boys counselor and instructor in government and athletics, California Junior Republic, Chino, 1911–14, member, board of trustees, since 1920; recipient of honorary plaques, awards, and decorations by several veterans organizations; member, South Gate Chamber of Commerce; member, Huntington Park, Downey, and South Gate YMCA; member of Moose, Eagles; past and presently listed in "Who's Who."

In CLYDE DOYLE'S passing, the Nation, California, and his immediate congressional district have lost a very conscientious and dedicated Member of Congress.

Mrs. Johnson wishes to join me in extending our heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and her daughter.

Remarks by Representative Evins

Of Tennessee

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my friends from California and others in paying brief but sincere tribute to the memory of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California, Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. I am saddened indeed to hear of his passing.

CLYDE DOYLE was first elected to the 79th Congress and has rendered many years of outstanding service to our country. He was a great patriot, blessed with a good mind, and dedicated to hard work and to the service of his district, State, and Nation.

In the passing of Congressman DOYLE, the House has lost a distinguished Member and I have lost a personal friend. I want to extend an expression of my most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and to the members of his family. We shall all miss CLYDE DOYLE immensely.

Remarks by Representative Elliott

Of Alabama

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply saddened by the unexpected death of my friend CLYDE DOYLE, long a Representative in Congress from the State of California. CLYDE DOYLE was one of the finest people I have ever known. He was sincere, studious, thoughtful, and deeply religious. CLYDE DOYLE was compassionate in his consideration of the problems of the people of his district and, indeed, of the problems of the people of the entire Nation. He was all-American in his thinking. He was an outstanding member of the Committee on Armed Services of the House. No one knew more about the cost of the defense of our country than did Congressman DOYLE. His only son lost his life in the defense of this country in World War II. The defense of the United States was not a matter of partisan consideration with CLYDE DOYLE. One of the most stirring speeches I ever heard in this House was made by CLYDE DOYLE more than a dozen years ago. The title of his speech was "Don't Play Politics With Defense."

CLYDE DOYLE also was an outstanding member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. He likewise gave great attention to his duties and responsibilities as a member of that committee. He made an outstanding record there. CLYDE DOYLE loved America and its institutions.

CLYDE DOYLE, as a sort of hobby, kept daily notes on the proceedings of the House. These notes were to be made the basis of a book about the U.S. House of Representatives. He and I talked about his proposed book many times. We last discussed it here on the floor of the House on Monday of this week. On that occasion, he asked me to tell him what I considered to be my own greatest accomplishment in the 15 years I have served in Congress. I told him I was proudest of my authorship in the House of the National Defense Education Act of 1958. Then we discussed what had been done under that act. CLYDE DOYLE told me he was asking the same question he asked me of other Congressmen.

As the Members know, not many good books have been written about the House. CLYDE DOYLE'S book would have been a gold mine of information about the House of Representatives. I deeply regret that he cannot finish the book; at the same time, I would like to express the hope that his relatives, or other interested friends, consider publishing that part of the book that is ready for publication or can be easily made ready.

CLYDE DOYLE pursued his hobby of noting the proceedings of the House, and of commenting on those of great interest, with such diligence and with such self-discipline that I am sure the publication of his book would be enlightening and very helpful to students of the Congress and to those who serve here in the future.

Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a gentleman of the highest order. He was an outstanding and effective Member of the House. As a friend, I share the great loss which his family and other friends feel so acutely today.

Remarks by Representative Herlong

Of Florida

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in my opinion no man has more deserved to serve in this body than CLYDE DOYLE. CLYDE DOYLE lived to be of service to others. He loved his fellow man, and he served him well. There was not an ounce of venom in him, and he had a great store of good will, sympathy, and understanding. This body and the whole country share a great loss with his passing.

Remarks by Representative Hagen

Of California

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of both myself and my wife, Martha, I wish to express our feeling of loss arising from the death of the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE, of California. At the same time I express my sympathy to his beloved family. Truly we share a great loss.

My acquaintanceship with our late beloved colleague began in Long Beach, Calif., in 1932. At the time I was a student at Long Beach Junior College and a member of the Hammurabi Pre-Legal Society. One of our guest speakers was CLYDE DOYLE, who was then only an active practicing attorney. He spoke to us about the flora of the semiarid mountains in the Los Angeles-Long Beach area. I mention this because it demonstrates the versatility of the man and reveals a significant aspect of his character. He loved the outdoors and was an avid naturalist and fisherman. He loved the outdoors because he wanted room and a lack of distraction to meditate upon his personality and problems and relationship to both God and man. He shared this experience with a son who was unfortunately killed during the war.

In the Congress and elsewhere the descriptive noun "gentleman" is used in somewhat formal and perfunctory fashion with no particular effort to plumb its meaning or to properly identify the recipient of that description. The dictionary definition of "gentleman" is "A man of good breeding, kindness, courtesy, and honor; a man having worthy ideals and refinement of thought and action." CLYDE DOYLE certainly deserved this description. No higher compliment can be paid to him.

CLYDE was soft spoken and courteous. I have spoken with him many times about many things, including political campaigns and controversial matters of government, and never once did he utter an unkind word about any other person. It was not in his nature to be unkind to anyone and very few of us can boast of this characteristic of a truly religious and humanitarian man. Politics and government and business would be less of a jungle if there were more men like CLYDE engaged therein.

Mr. DOYLE was a great man. He utilized his career as a Congressman solely for doing the greatest good for the greatest number without any thought of self-return or self-advancement. He will be missed by the Nation he loved so dearly.

Of him and others like him a poet has said:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Remarks by Representative Broomfield

Of Michigan

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, we have suffered a great loss because of the death of our distinguished colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

His service to his Nation and to his native State of California has been outstanding and of great benefit to all of us.

If there was one quality which Congressman DOYLE possessed more than any other, I believe it was compassion. He understood his fellow humans, their wants, their needs, their dreams, and their hopes. He had the remarkable ability of seeing the best in others and in understanding another person's point of view.

His citizenship was outstanding, and he followed up his words with constructive deeds. It is no accident that Congressman DOYLE received so many awards for outstanding citizenship. He believed in being a good citizen in an active way, in wholehearted participation in efforts to improve the lot of those less fortunate than himself.

Because of the time that CLYDE DOYLE spent on this earth, our Nation and his native State are better places to live. He lived a full, rich life, a life filled to the brim with concern and compassion for those with whom he came in contact.

All of us will miss his wise words, his gentleness, his kindness, his undertanding. It is a privilege to have known him and to have counted him as a friend.

Remarks by Representative Fisher

Of Texas

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I share the admiration that has been expressed here today for the late CLYDE DOYLE, of California. It was my good fortune to have known him quite well and to have been closely associated with him in many respects during his service here. I cannot think of a man with whom I have served who commanded such universal respect on the part of his fellow Members. He was courteous, forthright, sincere, dedicated, and energetic.

I extend my deepest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family in their bereavement.

Remarks by Representative Hemphill

Of South Carolina

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, many men who come to the Congress, or serve in the Senate of the United States, take pride in the fact that through some public work they are able to create, as it were, back in their own territory, a monument to their service in the Congress of the United States, service to their country. All of us like to think that posterity will do us honor for what we have done here, and the vanity which is a part of almost every personality I have known here is given so much satisfaction when we see a public building or other edifice with our name on it. But I think the real monuments that we build are the sermons that we preach with our lives.

When I heard the news about CLYDE DOYLE I was on my way from my room to the House Office Building. As I parked my car one of the policemen said to me, "It's too bad about CLYDE DOYLE, he was such a fine fellow." I hurried on to breakfast and a fellow Congressman from a State far removed said, "CLYDE DOYLE was a Christian gentleman." Later, an elevator boy made a remark to a group of us that, "Mr. DOYLE was certainly a wonderful gentleman." I am sure that from the great beyond where good and fine men go, he must somehow know of the magnificent impression for good he made here with his life. He preached a sermon for good, for example, and for guidance. His monument is a living monument that will live on in the hearts and the minds of those of us who were privileged to know him—not just Congressmen and Senators, but people who worked in and around the Capitol regardless of their particular capacity or calling.

We often speak of a public servant as being dedicated. CLYDE DOYLE lived the word. He kept an hour-by-hour account of everything that happened here, and while he did not make many speeches, whenever he did talk, he was accurate and he was listened to.

Today is a day of sadness, for we have lost a friend; but today is also a day of gladness that we had the privilege of knowing him, and I am sure I express the sentiments of the Members of the House of Representatives when I say that I am glad that CLYDE DOYLE lived. I am glad he lived because his life was good for the Nation, good for his district, good for his people, and good for his many friends as a monument of integrity and example.

To his family, Mrs. Hemphill and I extend our deepest sympathy.

Remarks by Representative Rhodes

Of Pennsylvania

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply saddened this morning to hear the news of the death of my friend and respected colleague, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE of California.

For almost 20 years in the Congress, CLYDE has served his country and his constituents well. He was a dedicated American who loved his country and cherished the goals of progressive and humanitarian legislation.

CLYDE, as we all knew him, was a man of the highest character and integrity. He was a tireless worker with a sincere and ardent interest in the people of his district and of the Nation.

He was a modest and mild-mannered man. Even when he was the target for unfair criticism he was tolerant and patient toward those who opposed him.

He reflected integrity on the Congress. The stature and memory of CLYDE DOYLE will stand as a monument to a noble and great man and should serve as a deterrent to those who seek to incite the public against the Congress and discredit it as an institution and an instrument of the people in our democratic society.

To his beloved wife, Lydia, his daughter and grandchildren, Mrs. Rhodes and I express our deepest sympathy at their great loss. I join with all of my colleagues in sharing their grief and sorrow.

Remarks by Representative Pool

Of Texas

Mr. POOL. Mr. Speaker, I join with the other Members in expressing my sorrow on the passing of CLYDE DOYLE.

While I have only known CLYDE for the past 2½ months, I was fortunate enough to serve with him on the Committee on Un-American Activities and valued him as a personal friend as well as a colleague. Here in the House, on many occasions, CLYDE invited me to sit with him during the sessions. As a freshman Congressman, I asked him to explain the various motions and activities here on the floor. CLYDE not only answered my questions, but pointed out to me many other matters that he felt would help me in my service as a Congressman.

I discovered that he loved people and found some good in everyone. Words cannot express my sentiments to his loved ones in the sorrow that all of us felt at his passing. I will miss his counsel, the Nation will miss his service, and to his wife and family, I can only extend my deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

Remarks by Representative Roybal

Of California

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in expressing my sincerest and deepest sympathy to Mrs. Lydia Doyle on the passing of her husband, Hon. CLYDE DOYLE, longtime Representative of California's 23d District.

I have known CLYDE DOYLE for a number of years, and his death leaves a void that will be difficult if not impossible to fill. His long and illustrious career of public service to the people of the Los Angeles County and southern California area stands as a tribute to his qualities of integrity and devotion to principle.

CLYDE DOYLE's memory will serve us all as inspiration in the years ahead as an example of the kind of public servant we need in these difficult times.

Remarks by Representative Thompson

Of Texas

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, as the years go by and our colleagues come and go, there are some with whom we feel a particular closeness. So it was with CLYDE DOYLE and me. I cannot tell you why, and I doubt if he could either, but there was something about it that always drew us together. Perhaps an expression of the younger generation particularly fits the case. They would say "we clicked."

Times without number I have gone over to sit beside him in the place he habitually occupied. I used to marvel at his prolific note taking. I do not suppose any man in the Congress kept as copious a record of what went on here on the floor. I might add that I doubt that anyone among us had as good a record of attendance.

I cannot remember when CLYDE was not here, faithful and attentive. It is significant that he carried this on right up through yesterday—the last day of his life. I shall miss him. We shall all miss him. My sympathy goes especially to his widow and the surviving members of his family. My sympathy, too, goes to his California colleagues who will miss him perhaps more than any of us.

Remarks by Representative McMillan

Of South Carolina

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to learn of our colleague Congressman CLYDE DOYLE'S untimely passing when I arrived at my office this morning. I had an opportunity to have the pleasure of talking with Mr. DOYLE yesterday concerning matters in connection with the Un-American Activities Committee where he so ably served as vice chairman. I want to join the delegation from California and the entire Congress in expressing my deepest sympathy to his family.

Certainly there was no Member of the Congress that was held in higher esteem than the late Congressman CLYDE DOYLE. I had the privilege and pleasure of getting acquainted with Congressman DOYLE when his son, who was serving as a pilot with the U.S. Air Force, located at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, S.C., during World War II, was killed. This young officer was on a reconnaissance flight over the ocean. He was within a mile of the airbase at Myrtle Beach when his plane made a nose dive and went out of control. The young officer and his plane crashed into the Atlantic Ocean, and I do not believe his body was ever recovered. I do not think I have ever felt quite so bad as I did when Congressman DOYLE arrived at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base, which is located in my district. Every effort had been made to locate his son, but all were unsuccessful.

The State of California and the Nation has lost one of its finest legislators, and we shall all remember how dedicated he was to his work as a Representative here in the National House of Representatives.

Again, I want to express my deepest sympathy to the members of the late Congressman DOYLE'S family.

Remarks by Representative Dorn

Of South Carolina

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a Christian gentleman. One of the best, down to earth, commonsense talks on Christian faith I ever heard anywhere was delivered by CLYDE DOYLE to the House Christian breakfast group. He attended regularly and always left a profound impression when he talked. His intense belief in Christianity and love of these United States made of him a bitter foe of atheistic communism.

CLYDE DOYLE believed the best way to fight communism was to fill the hearts and minds of our youth with Americanism.

I am glad I knew and associated with CLYDE DOYLE. He was a great American and dedicated to making this Congress the greatest institution on earth. We have lost a truly great man. Mrs. Dorn joins in my deepest sympathy to his wonderful and devoted family.

Remarks by Representative Hawkins

Of California

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, California, the Congress, and our Nation have lost a dedicated public servant in the untimely passing of our colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, of California. His patience, courageous loyalty to his convictions, and his ever willingness to help others, were attributes we always admired. Even those who sometimes disagreed with some of his views respected his devotion to those principles in which he believed and by which he lived.

I shall remember him as the two of us, the day before his passing, walked down to the well of the House to vote—he to vote one way, I the opposite. We chatted as friends, and he, as the elder statesman he was, gave to me advice on many things concerning the welfare of our community. This was typical of the man; never to hate, never to be bitter, never to appear superior in wisdom, though he was a wise man.

CLYDE DOYLE was a friend to all of us, and he will be truly missed.

My deepest sympathy goes to the members of his family.

Remarks by Representative McIntire

Of Maine

Mr. McINTIRE. Mr. Speaker, the passing of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE brought sadness to all of us who have had the privilege of serving with him in the House of Representatives.

I shall always remember him as one deeply dedicated to his work, his country, and his God. He was one of the kindest persons I have ever known.

As CLYDE DOYLE was a man of great faith, so did he constantly work for the protection of our country against communism. He also was devoted to helping our young people gain an understanding of not only the privileges of American citizenship but of the responsibilities as well. And the precepts he advanced for good citizenship were always supported by good example.

CLYDE DOYLE's passing leaves a real void, but we can be consoled by the fact that he left us a rich store of pleasant memories.

Mrs. McIntire joins me in expressing deep sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and members of the family.

Remarks by Representative Dague

Of Pennsylvania

Mr. DAGUE. Mr. Speaker, the Grim Reaper stands at our elbow as a constant reminder that this life is uncertain and fleeting and that we are never sure when the call may come to each one of us. Last Wednesday we joined with our departed colleague in the important work of this House and we saw him leave at the close of day in apparent health and strength. And then on the morrow we learned with grief and consternation of his untimely demise.

Passing this way but once it behooves all of us to have a bit more concern for the amenities as we meet, even casually, those who are our associates on this life's journey. In that particular, CLYDE DOYLE was truly one of this earth's noblemen, and his qualities of greatness stem from an innate kindness and the traits of a gentleman. Our colleague and brother was a kind man, a gentle man, and withal a representative of the people who walked in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

As the vice president of our Christian fellowship group he led our meditations on occasion and demonstrated by his humble but nonetheless forceful witnessing that he had made his peace with his Maker and that his life would continue to be one of dedication in the service of the Nation and his fellow men. We who have passed through the dark valley know something of the heartbreak and anguish that now assail his loved ones, and our sympathy goes out to his bereaved helpmate and the other members of his family with whom we are joined in mourning the passing of a great public servant, who was also a fine Christian gentleman.

Remarks by Representative Hansen

Of Washington

Mrs. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, Representative CLYDE DOYLE was a close personal friend of mine. I shall miss Mr. DOYLE not only because he was one of the kindest and most thoughtful of persons, but because he was a man dedicated to helping his fellow man.

Many of his family continue to live in my congressional district. I know most of them personally. To Mrs. Doyle and his daughter and to the other members of his family I extend my heartfelt sympathies.

Remarks by Representative Matsunaga

Of Hawaii

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Speaker, being only a freshman Member of this honorable body, I have not had the privilege of knowing CLYDE DOYLE as those who have already expressed their sentiments. Ours was only a casual acquaintanceship. But I do know that he was a supporter of statehood for Hawaii when we were knocking at the congressional doors for admission into the Union.

As a representative of Hawaii's grateful people, I join in grieving over the loss of CLYDE DOYLE, of whom it can aptly be said that he, too, like his son, gave up his life for love of his country and his fellow men.

While I fully realize that human words, no matter how sweet, cannot beguile Mrs. Doyle and her family from the great sorrow that must be theirs, I wish to add my expressions of sympathy and condolences to those already expressed. I do hope and pray that they will derive some comfort from the fact that there are many friends and beneficiaries of his handiwork who share in their immeasurable loss.

Remarks by Representative Burkhalter

Of California

Mr. BURKHALTER. Mr. Speaker, today our country, our State, and our Nation lost a real champion of democracy, with the sudden passing of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE. Little did we realize that when he answered the rollcall on the floor yesterday that we were witnessing the final vote to be cast by this sincere, dedicated legislator. His 16 years were spent in devotion to what he felt was the right answer to the many legislative decisions that he faced. This record of accomplishment has left its mark of sincerity upon his contemporaries for time immemorial.

It has only been my privilege to serve with him for a short time on the Hill. Even though this is my first term my colleague CLYDE DOYLE has found the time to drop by my office and ask if there was any way in which he could be of assistance to me or my staff in helping us to get started with our future endeavors in representing the district.

This was the fabric of the man; he always had time for his fellow man.

Mrs. Burkhalter joins with me in expressing our heartfelt sympathy to his wife and daughter and her family in the loss of a devoted husband and father.

Remarks by Representative Kilgore

Of Texas

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow that all of us who knew and served with our late colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, learned of his death.

He was a man of the most unswerving dedication to the concepts of Christianity and patriotism. I have served with him on the Armed Services Committee and have observed his unfailing devotion to duty, there and on the floor of the House of Representatives. Along with people the world over who are joined in the mutual goal of fighting communism I am acquainted with the outstanding work he did as acting chairman and longtime member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. In this work he never forgot that the dignity of man is priceless even to the most unfortunate among us.

May God comfort Mr. DOYLE's family with the memory that he was a Christian, a gentleman and a patriot, and one with whom we in the House of Representatives were privileged in the highest sense to serve, a man whose special attributes will be deeply missed by us, and by freedom-loving people everywhere.

Remarks by Representative Moss

Of California

Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, love of family, love of country, complete dedication to its welfare, compassion for his fellow man; kindly, gentle, and always fair in his dealings with others. These were the distinguishing characteristics of a warm and humble human being whose presence will be sorely missed by all the Members of this body. Serving with CLYDE DOYLE was an experience of personal enrichment to all who shared the privilege. Much has been said here today attesting to the high regard in which he was held by the Members of the House of Representatives. Death at any time shocks those close to the person whose life ceases. But, Mr. Speaker, I know the members of Congressman DOYLE's family can read our own personal expressions of sorrow and, from them, gain great pride that the one they loved so dearly was so universally esteemed. I join in expressing my sincerest sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and all the other members of our late colleague's family.

Remarks by Representative Patman

Of Texas

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, nothing can quite compensate or fully console the Members of this House or the people of the country, for a loss so severe as the sudden and unexpected death on March 14 of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE, of California. Yet there was an aspect of CLYDE DOYLE'S successful, fruitful, and effective life, that provides us all with some modicum of comfort in our bereavement. For CLYDE DOYLE had recognition and respect from the people he served for 17 years in this House as the Representative from the 23d District of California. Moreover, while his services were constant and distinctive and both the quality and the quantity of his effort for his district, for California, and for his country, were massive and rich in results, he had the satisfaction, through the years, of public appreciation.

Not only was he appreciated and admired by his constituents who nine times elected him to this House, but he knew the admiration and affection of his colleagues here; and the leadership held him in high esteem. So that as he moved among us to the very last, CLYDE DOYLE was rich in honors, in the respect of his colleagues, and in commendations from those who were close to him, the late Speaker Sam Rayburn for example, who on occasion evaluated as exemplary his sound and steady and unflagging workmanship as an American legislator.

For 17 years, as I know of my personal knowledge, he kept a daily diary of the doings of the Congress. This, it seems to me, could be an invaluable personal record, rich in observations, commentary, anecdotes. For CLYDE DOYLE had a feel for history and events and a sensitive appreciation of the characteristics of those around him and their reactions. I hope someday that his diary may become a public record, for inevitably it will throw the light of a fine imagination on the chronicle of our times in the House. Those of us who knew CLYDE DOYLE well, know also that the diary will have about it a kindliness and a sympathy for his fellow man that will cause hurt to no one should it ever achieve publication.

It may perhaps be said that those of us who were nearest to him knew him for qualities and accomplishments that cannot be found in reports and statements appearing as matters of routine in the Congressional Record. I, for one, especially regarded him highly for his services on legislative matters, affecting savings and loan problems and banking. He was an indefatiguable worker and had what some of our staff people like to call a knowledge in depth of the matters that came before him. When he discussed a problem of legislation that touched on the armed services, for example—he was a member of the committee—he was persuasive, articulate, informed, and sound.

Similarly, in his 12 years as a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, he demonstrated an understanding of this profoundly controversial problem that revealed not only the importance of the committee and the need for it, but gave confidence to us all that its management, its reports, and its decisions would meet high standards of justice. For CLYDE DOYLE was not only a first-class lawyer, he was also a person for whom justice and fairplay had absolute meanings. And many of us have already commented on his gentleness, his sensitive human feelings, and his broad tolerance. These qualities in our colleague made him an outstanding friend of a whole spectrum of public causes in which he was constantly and often brilliantly active: from the YMCA in his district to the California Philharmonic Orchestra Association, and from the Boy Scouts to the Kiwanis Club. The list of his affiliations make a column or more of fine print, and I think it can be said, that all of them felt the beneficent influence of his help, his counsel, and his leadership. No wonder that at one time the inter-allied Council of Service Clubs, of Long Beach, accorded him the Meritorious Citizenship Award as the most valuable and useful citizen.

That accolade, "most valuable and useful citizen," best sums up the superb career of CLYDE DOYLE. It is good to know that he knew he had the praise and approbation of his fellow man and that everywhere he was regarded with honor and affection.

Remarks by Representative Roosevelt

Of California

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I was profoundly shocked and deeply grieved upon learning of the death of my colleague from California, the Honorable CLYDE DOYLE.

Those of us who had the privilege of knowing and working with him always respected his devotion to duty, the sincerity of his conviction, and his unceasing effort, as he explained it, "to find true goals for lasting values."

In his day-to-day relationships with people CLYDE DOYLE always showed the understanding, patience, and humility that endeared him to so many of us. Moreover, though at times we disagreed on certain issues that arose in this distinguished House, I never found him to be disagreeable. His untimely passing is a great loss to California and the Nation. Perhaps we can find solace in the fact that the memory of our colleague and his accomplishments shall long remain, untouched by the forgetfulness of time.

Mrs. Roosevelt joins me in expressing sincere sympathy to Mrs. Doyle and the family.

Remarks by Representative Pelly

Of Washington

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to our departed colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE], I include a prayer.

This prayer which I offer, Mr. Speaker, was delivered in the House of Representatives on May 6, 1913, by the then Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D.D. It was offered on behalf of a deceased Member of Congress of that day, and it has seemed to me it expresses in plain but very sincere words the emotion, sympathy, and deep sense of loss which all Members of this body, some 50 years later, have experienced in connection with the death of our dear and honored colleague, CLYDE DOYLE.

The prayer I offer reads:

We come to Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, with hearts bowed in sorrow, because death, always mysterious and unbidden, has visited this congressional body and taken from its midst a Member who was peculiarly fitted by natural gifts, education, and experience to serve his people and his country. But Thou are God; Thou knowest the beginning and the end; Thou hast ordered all things, and Thou doest all things well. Comfort us, his people, the stricken wife and children, by the eternal faith revealed to the world in the life, death, and resurrection of the Christ who thus brought to light life and immortality in Thee.

> Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
> Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
> Change and decay in all around I see;
> O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

Amen.

Remarks by Representative Harding

Of Idaho

Mr. HARDING. Mr. Speaker, our Nation has suffered a great loss in the passing of our colleague CLYDE DOYLE. To know CLYDE DOYLE was to love him. I have never met a more kindly or genuine person in my life.

During my first term in the Congress I was informed that there were no assigned seats in the House of Representatives. While this was true, CLYDE DOYLE had his own seat and everyone was aware of it. When the House was in session, he was nearly always sitting in it.

This kind and intelligent man displayed a devotion to duty that was an example to all of us. He possessed one of the finest attendance records in the House.

The thing that I shall remember most about CLYDE DOYLE is the counsel he gave me when I first came to the Congress 2 years ago on his practice of accumulating the Chaplain's prayers and sending them out to the ministers of the churches in his district. "Chaplain Braskamp says a wonderful prayer," CLYDE informed me, "and I feel that the ministers in my district in California will find his prayers spiritual and helpful."

CLYDE DOYLE was a great Christian and a great American and a friend to all of us. I know that his presence in the House brought out the best in all of us just as his final words in letters to his constituents, "our beloved Nation deserves the best of whatever we are," attempted to bring out the best in them.

I extend to his family my profound sympathy in this hour of their great loss and sorrow.

Remarks by Representative Gathings

Of Arkansas

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, it was a saddening shock to learn of the passing of CLYDE DOYLE, of California. My office and his have been located on the same corridor for a number of years. Many times it has been my privilege to walk across to the House floor with him. Only a few days ago I stopped by and visited him in his new more spacious office suite which is on the back corner of the same corridor in the Longworth Building. He was quite proud of this new office and showed me through it, pointing out all of its advantageous points.

The first time I had ever known CLYDE DOYLE well was a few years ago when a congressional group visited the city of New York. It was a spring 2-day trip. We traveled with our families together by train. I came to know him and the members of his family on this New York tour. He was a kindly, genuine, and sincere man. I never heard him utter an unkind word about anyone. He was a dedicated public servant. He possessed humility, gentleness, and an even temper.

My sympathy goes out to his companion and helpmate and other members of his family. A true friend, he will be greatly missed by his colleagues on the floor of the House.

Remarks by Representative Udall

Of Arizona

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, CLYDE DOYLE was a truly noble man. He was a credit to this House, to his State, and to his Nation. All of us were honored to have been his colleagues. CLYDE was too big for pettiness; he always had time for little acts of kindness and courtesy; and he went out of his way to help the new Members. CLYDE DOYLE had a deep belief in democracy and in the rights and freedoms of individual men. Democratic government works because of men like him.

I shall always remember this good man as a friend and as a fine public servant.

Remarks by Senator Kuchel

Of California

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, by now the House has heard the tragic news about our colleague, the late CLYDE DOYLE, of California, who passed away only a few hours ago. All of us mourn his passing.

I had the pleasure of calling the late Representative DOYLE my friend. For nearly 20 years he served his district, his State, and his country in the Congress of the United States. He was a dedicated public servant. He paid unswerving devotion to his country and to his country's needs.

The Nation has lost a valued public servant, and we have lost a very dear friend.

Remarks by Senator Engle

Of California

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. President, I deeply regret the death of my old and very dear friend, CLYDE DOYLE, who passed away very tragically and unexpectedly today.

He was elected to Congress by the 23d District of California nine times.

He was a very fine lawyer, a man with the strongest sense of civic responsibility, a dedicated public servant.

He was blessed, above all else, with a great love for people, and he had a very special quality of enthusiasm which never faded with the passing of the years.

I wish to quote what our great and beloved former Speaker of the House of Representatives, Sam Rayburn, said about CLYDE DOYLE:

> CLYDE DOYLE is one of the most effective men in his committees and also on the floor of the House of Representatives.
> He is able, he is honest, and he has the facility for expressing himself in such a way as to impress all the Members of the House with his knowledge of the subject in hand. I think CLYDE is one of the very best men we have in the House of Representatives.
> We have shown our confidence in him in many ways.

Of course, Mr. President, that was true. The people of his district showed their confidence in him in many ways.

He received both the nomination of his own party and that of the Republican Party in 1952 and 1958. In the last election in which a Member of the Congress was permitted to cross-file on both tickets, he was the only Member of the House in southern California who had the distinction of being nominated by both parties. This was an unusual and a unique tribute.

His outstanding community leadership over a period of many years was recognized by his own community. In 1936 he received unanimously the award of the Meritorious Citizenship Plaque by a vote of all the service clubs in Long Beach, Calif., as the most valuable and useful adult citizen in Long Beach.

CLYDE DOYLE will be deeply missed by all of us who knew him so well. His services in the Congress of the United States were extremely valuable. CLYDE DOYLE believed there was no office in the land that equaled service in the Congress of the United States. He was proud of that service. He was proud of the great district which he represented.

His death is a loss not only to the State of California, but to the Congress of the United States and the American people.

Remarks by Senator Keating

Of New York

Mr. KEATING. I should like to join in expressing sincere sorrow over the passing of CLYDE DOYLE. He was a fine man and a most conscientious Member of the other body. Only a week or two ago I saw CLYDE and thought he looked not up to par, so I said, "CLYDE, you ought to slow down a little bit." He said, "Well, that is a hard thing to do." That was typical of him.

He was one of the hardest working Members of the other body, sincerely dedicated to the interests of our country. His loss will be deeply felt in many areas. We will miss him here in the Congress and throughout the Nation. I extend to his family my sincere sympathy.

Remarks by Senator Stennis

Of Mississippi

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I join my colleague in a word of tribute to our late colleague, Representative DOYLE, of California. I came to know him well through our duties relating to the subject of the armed services and respected him and appreciated the great character he was.

One of the things that impressed me was his untiring interest in the youth of the Nation. He was always trying to get the country to take a step forward and open up opportunities and corrective measures for our young people. I join my colleague in expressing our sorrow at the news of his passing.

Remarks by Senator Kefauver

Of Tennessee

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wish to join in the remarks by our colleagues on the passing of Representative CLYDE DOYLE, with whom I served in the House for many years.

He was an outstanding Member of the House, and his useful work will be remembered.

Remarks by Senator Humphrey

Of Minnesota

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to join with my colleagues in paying my respects to a dear and wonderful friend who has now gone to his heavenly reward. I have known Representative CLYDE DOYLE for a long time. He was a fine and great Congressman from California. I was grieved to read in this morning's press that he passed away last night.

Representative DOYLE served his country faithfully. He served his State with outstanding ability and dedication. His life was one of compassionate service to his fellow men. I feel it a real loss to learn that he has passed on.

I extend to his loved ones, the members of his family, and to his friends the heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolences of both Mrs. Humphrey and myself. We were privileged to know Representative DOYLE for many years.

Remarks by Senator Randolph

Of West Virginia

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, CLYDE DOYLE was a Representative not only of his district in California, in the best sense of devoted service; he was also a man of conscience and courage.

It was my privilege to serve with him in the House for many years. I cherished a personal as well as an official friendship with him. I mourn his untimely passing earlier today.

This is said slowly, with a sense of memory for a good and great man. He worked as if he were to live forever. He lived as if he were to die tomorrow.

Memorial Tributes

Tribute by Representative Shelley

Of California

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of our colleagues one of the last letters written by our fellow Congressman, and my fellow Californian, CLYDE DOYLE. I wish to insert his letter in the Record for it conveys the warm, friendly, and genuineness that were so truly the marks of CLYDE DOYLE. In reading this letter addressed to Mr. Bart Lytton we can only be but reminded that the death of CLYDE DOYLE spelled sad days not only for California, but for the Nation as well.

Mr. Speaker, in a real sense, his 16 years of congressional service was a career which served as a continuing source of betterment of our land. Those back in his home district, and for that matter those across the Nation who were fortunate enough to have known CLYDE—and all who knew him were his friends—will recognize in this letter the qualities that so well mark the quality of his character: humility, gentleness, and honor.

The letter follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., February 26, 1963.

Mr. BART LYTTON,
Dinner Chairman, Seventh Annual F.D.R. Dinner, Los Angeles, Calif.

MY DEAR FRIEND BART: I would surely love to be able to have the great joy and inspiration, which it certainly would be to me, to be present on the evening of March 14 when you friends have the seventh annual F.D.R. dinner and honor Gov. Edmund G. Brown for his recent gubernatorial victory, but of course, friend Bart, I cannot make it.

I will have to be right here on the job in the Nation's Capitol, but I do want to express my appreciation to you and all the people of the great 23d District for the support you gave to the reelection of our great Governor.

With best wishes, I remain,

Cordially,

CLYDE DOYLE.

Tribute by Representative Hosmer

Of California

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, the following fitting tribute to our departed colleague, CLYDE DOYLE, was part of the editorial page of the Long Beach Independent Press Telegram on March 15:

DOYLE LIVED UP TO MOTTO: "GIVE NATION YOUR BEST"

CLYDE DOYLE was a conscientious man. The career which ended in his death in Washington yesterday was consistently marked by evidences of a man doing his best. Mr. DOYLE did his best as a Long Beach citizen who accepted many civic responsibilities and as a Congressman serving seven and a half terms during some of the Nation's most turbulent and critical years.

Before he went into public life Mr. DOYLE had a key role in innumerable civic activities in Long Beach. A plaque on the wall at Municipal Auditorium testifies to this distinguished effort. It shows that he was awarded the Inter-Service-Club Meritorious Citizens Award for outstanding civic service.

His congressional career began in the war year of 1944 soon after his son was killed in action. A Democrat, he was temporarily retired in the Republican sweep of 1946, returned to Congress in 1948 and remained until his death. How well he was regarded and in what affection he was held in Congress was indicated by 2½ hours of eulogies on the floor of the House yesterday.

After his early years in Congress as a Representative of the district including Long Beach, Mr. DOYLE changed residence to South Gate and continued as Representative of the northern part of the old district, cut off in redistricting. But he continued his strong interest in the welfare of Long Beach and was a strong ally of Representative Craig Hosmer in such vital matters as the shipyard and naval hospital project.

His congressional service was marked by a long and unsuccessful crusade in behalf of servicemen who had received less than an honorable discharge. But his prominence came as a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, of which he was acting chairman at the time of his death. He was devoted to the cause of rooting out and opposing communism, and added strength to the committee's efforts by sponsoring reform of hearing procedures.

As a politician, Representative DOYLE inevitably drew some fire in the partisan and ideological wars of his congressional years, but the sincerity of his patriotism and devotion to principle was never questioned. He was a lifetime admirer and student of the career of Abraham Lincoln, whose picture he long kept above his desk.

Mr. DOYLE was an emotional man, and outward evidences of that sometimes drew frivolous comment. But there were indications of a deep-seated feeling for principle and of warm compassion.

Among his political eccentricities was the inevitable reference to his district as "the great 18th" or "the great 23d" Congressional District. He never failed to remind listeners of his pride in the area he represented.

For years, his letters and messages carried a line across the bottom: "Our beloved country deserves the best we can give it." CLYDE DOYLE lived up to that motto.

Tribute by Representative Miller

Of California

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I came to Congress more than 18 years ago at the same time that the late Congressman CLYDE DOYLE joined our great House of Representatives. Our long, close association in representing constituents in California, has made his loss particularly personal for me.

Congressman DOYLE had a distinguished record in serving the people of his area, and I believe that his activity in Congress warranted the admiration of all of us who have had an opportunity to serve with him.

It was gratifying to see the tribute given to Congressman CLYDE DOYLE by a newspaper in my congressional district, the Oakland Tribune, which also is the newspaper serving the county of CLYDE DOYLE's birth.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I am pleased to insert the fitting editorial tribute to Congressman CLYDE DOYLE:

CONGRESSMAN CLYDE DOYLE

Congressman CLYDE DOYLE, a Democrat from Long Beach, gave himself unstintingly to the service of his community, State, and Nation.

He was born in Oakland in 1887 and attended public school here. After obtaining his law degree from the University of Southern California, he resided in Long Beach, and later, South Gate.

During his long and unusually fruitful life he helped draw the city charter of Long Beach, organized the Long Beach Kiwanis Club, chairmaned the sale of tuberculosis stamps for some years, served as a trustee for a crippled children's hospital, presided over the Long Beach Recreation Association, worked actively on various committees of the California Bar Association, and was a director of the National City Bank of Long Beach.

Congress beckoned, and in 1944 he won his first election, and after losing the next one, he returned to Congress in 1948 and stayed there until his recent death.

So widely appreciated was Congressman DOYLE that in 1952 he was the nominee of both Democratic and Republican Parties. In 1958 he had no opposition at all, and in 1960 he won reelection by a landslide 93,000 votes.

Congressman DOYLE was a distinguished member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, whose mission he heartily advanced. He believed that the committee's mandate was too vague, and urged Congress to transform the committee into a House Committee on Subversive Activities.

Undoubtedly Congressman DOYLE was bewildered at times by the unremitting leftist vituperation directed against HCUA and its members. However, the committee received his undeviating support, and the investigations and legislation which the committee has produced, to the great benefit of the Republic, were partially the product of his wisdom and labor.

The loss of Congressman DOYLE will leave a deep breach in the ranks of California's Representatives.
